Senate Passes Bill Relaxing Hatch Act Here

Measure Would Let U. S. Workers Play Active Role In Party Politics

By Edward F. Ryan
Post Reporter

The Senate voted last night to let Federal and District employes play active roles in local party politics in the Maryland and Virginia areas around Washington.

The plan, still subject to conference action and House approval, applies also to other communities where the majority of the voters are Federal employes.

Existing Civil Service Commission rulings, made under the Hatch "clean-politics" law, permit such local political activity only on a nonpartisan or independent basis.

House Bill Similar

The Senate decision was made by voice-vote approval of a bill amending the Hatch law. The House had previously passed a similar bill, without, however, the section applying to the Federal employes of Greater Washington.

A major aim of the bill is to let the Civil Service Commission impose less severe penalties for Hatch-Act violations than discharge from the Federal service. The Senate bill sets as the minimum penalty in any case 60 days' suspension without pay. The Senate bill also permits reinstatement of employes previously discharged for minor infractions of the Hatch Act.

In another section the Senate voted to impose a penalty of $5000 or two years in jail for sending anonymous political campaign material through the mail.

Maryland and Virginia Senators teamed up in strong support of the Washington area plan. They charged the practice of requiring Federal workers to operate in nearby politics as "independents" was a threat to the two-party system.

Rep. Smith Favors Idea

Their view has already found a strong House ally in Representative Howard W. Smith (D., Va.), who represents the Virginia District bordering Washington. He testified for the change to a Senate subcommittee, and said he would have sponsored the same thing in the House, if he had caught the bill in time.

Smith voiced his support of the

22 Degrees Forecast for Early Today

Washington was due to shiver under 22-degree temperatures early this morning, with a low of 18 degrees forecast for the suburbs.

The high is expected to be a chilling 35 degrees today and Saturday. The low tonight will be about 20.

But although the Weather Bureau called for topcoat-plus-muffler conditions to remain in the District through the weekend, it promised clear skies for today.

It was with a vengeance that winter—on the coattails of a cold front from the Great Lakes region—hit Washington yesterday.

Silver Spring Told to Avoid Status of City

By Charles E. Davis, Jr.
Post Reporter

Silver Spring has long wanted to proclaim itself the second largest city in Maryland.

But if Silver Spring residents want the status of an incorporated city they will have to pay for it in extra taxes. And continuing to depend on Montgomery County for municipal services is not branded too bad a fate.

This is the conclusion drawn by Joseph M. Ray, consultant in the Bureau of Public Administration at the University of Maryland and executive secretary of the Maryland League of Municipalities.

The results of a lengthy survey entitled, "Improving Government in Silver Spring," were made public last night at a meeting of the Silver Spring Junior Chamber of Commerce, which sponsored the study.

Five Alternatives

Ray explored five avenues that could be followed to ease "growing pains" in nearby Maryland, and four of them had apparent deadends. Silver Spring might do well to remain in its present unincorporated bliss, he suggests.

It would be logical to include all the nearby Maryland area in the District of Columbia, says Ray, but would the legislators at Annapolis approve? Hardly.

Then there is the plan to incorporate the entire Maryland area suburban to Washington in one city government. This plan Ray recommends, but he concedes the obstacles to such a plan are "practically insurmountable."

How about making a metropolitan city of all of Montgomery County? Not as good as the previous plan, concludes Ray, and also unfeasible.

Should Silver Spring incorporate as a city? There would be advantages, Ray found, but again a catch: it would be "practically impossible" to operate a city of Capt. Burke, Critic Of Unification, Gets High Navy Post

NYHT News Service

Capt. Arleigh A. Burke, unification critic whose name recently was removed and then restored on a Navy promotion list, has been given a new topside assignment in the National Defense Department as part of a move to build up its research and development board into one of the Nation's most important agencies.

The assignment makes him Navy Secretary of the Board—one of the choice of billets open to a Navy officer.

A top defense official said that another big step in the effort to build up the research and development board may come next week with the announcement of the appointment of a well-known executive, with scientific background, as chairman of the board. He would replace Dr. Karl T. Compton, one of the Nation's leading atomic scientists, who resigned last November 3 because of failing health.

Witness Denies, Then Admits Numbers Play

By Benjamin Bradlee
Post Reporter

A saleswoman contradicted herself four times on the witness stand yesterday and finally admitted that she played the numbers with indicted gambler Attilio Acalotti.

Mrs. Rose King, 55, 1417 H st. ne., was the second Government witness to strike damaging blows to the defense by first denying, then admitting gambling activities with Acalotti.

Mrs. King, represented in the District Court room by counsel, first testified that she had never bet with Acalotti, never telephoned him, never owed him money, and never sent him money orders.

Under persistent questioning by Prosecutor William Hitz and over more persistent objections by Charles E. Ford, Acalotti's counsel, Mrs. King then haltingly admitted doing all four.

Acalotti, the self-styled "Mayor of Thomas Circle"; William "Snags" Lewis, alleged head of a 14-million-dollar-a-year gambling syndicate, and Frank Billeci, Washington Times-Herald circulation man, are being tried before Judge Alexander Holtzoff on charges of operating a numbers lottery.

Anti-Communist Bill Offered at Virginia Assembly

Richmond, Va., Jan. 19 (Spl.).—Norfolk delegate W. Carl Spencer dropped a resolution aimed at Communists into the hopper of the General Assembly today.

It amends the constitution to take away the right to register for voting and to hold office from:

"Persons who advocate any change by force or violence in the Government (of the State, locality and Federal Government) or who join, assist or otherwise contribute to any group or organization which, to the knowledge of such person, advocates or has as its purpose, aim or objective, whether avowed or inferred from its activities, any change by force or violence" in American Governments.

Red-Ruled Bulgaria Declares U. S. Envoy Persona Non Grata

The Bulgarian government has declared Donald R. Heath, United States Minister to that country, persona non grata, a step that means he must be recalled from Sofia.

The Bulgarian notice of its action has been received by the State Department, which is expected to release, probably today, both the Bulgarian note and the United States reply.

While the official declaration is aimed at Heath personally and does not in itself involve closing the United States Embassy at Sofia or recall of other American officials there, there was speculation here last night that the American Government might reply by calling home all of its diplomatic representatives in Bulgaria.

The action of the Sofia Government against Heath is the climax of a long series of charges aimed at him during the course of the political trials conducted by Bulgaria.

Heath was appointed to his post by President Truman on October 2, 1947.

FBI Has Clews To Brink Loot

Boston, Jan. 19 (AP).—The Federal Bureau of Investigation said tonight it knows the serial numbers of almost one-tenth of the million dollars cash grabbed here by nine masked gunmen Tuesday night.

Its listing of the numbers on $98,900 included in the fantastic haul at Brink's, Inc., a money transportation firm, was one of many developments today in the Nation-wide manhunt. Others were:

1. FBI Chief J. Edgar Hoover personally assumed supervision of the widening search for the gunmen who set a new record in larceny of cash.

2. In Miami, Fla., a former convict was detained for questioning by Boston police.

Truman Denies Crisis in Coal

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

President Truman, unruffled by the uproar over John L. Lewis' three-day work week, yesterday held fast to his insistence that there is no national coal emergency.

The Chief Executive told a White House press conference that he, and he alone will decide if and when there is an emergency.

When the time comes, he will declare an emergency and take whatever action necessary, Mr. Truman said.

Thus replied the President to the outcry from legislators on Capitol Hill, from coal operators and dealers over the country, from State and municipal officials who have been urging Mr. Truman to invoke the Taft-Hartley Act against

Board Veto of Corning Choice For Job Called School Threat

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

Board of Education action in overruling Schools Superintendent Hobart M. Corning on an appointment was described yesterday by the American Association of School Administrators as "a threat to the educational standards of local schools."

The statement, issued by Worth McClure, executive secretary of the organization, said it appeared that a majority faction "chose to disregard the professional qualifications of an individual recommended by the superintendent in favor of other qualifications totally unrelated to professional fitness."

The board, which refused Wednesday to approve the superintendent's choice of Miss Eleanor McAuliffe as principal of the new Sousa Junior High School, also came under the fire of the League of Women Voters of the District.

Mrs. Donald C. Beatty, president of the league, said the public has a right to an explanation of the "serious differences of opinion" between the board and the superintendent.

"As a matter of public information we feel that a clarification of the powers of the Board of Education and the superintendent is in the public interest," she said.

Dr. Allen Cross, president of the Eastern High School Alumni Association, said that he had sent a telegram to Dr. Corning, indorsing the superintendent's right to make appointments on the basis of the record of the candidate without interference of board members.

Ban on Franco Was Mistake, Acheson Says

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

Secretary Acheson promised Congressional leaders yesterday that the United States would vote in the next United Nations Assembly to rescind the ban on sending ambassadors to Franco Spain.

He made it clear that the United States disliked the ban, regarded it as a mistake, and would support any effort in the Assembly to get it reversed.

But in the meantime, he said, the United States was continuing to abide by the Assembly's "recommendation," even though ten countries have already ignored it and five others have announced their intention to send heads of missions back to Madrid.

The Secretary's assurance, the first formal statement of American policy on the subject since last May, was contained in a long letter to Senator Tom Connally (D., Texas), chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Similar letters went to Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.), the ranking Republican member, and to Representatives John Kee (D., W. Va.) and Charles A. Eaton (R., N. J.), the chairman and minority leader, respectively, of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Reds in Japan Reported Ending Cominform Fight

Tokyo (Friday), Jan. 20 (U.P.).—The Japanese Communist Party, under attack by the Cominform for delaying the revolution against the American occupation, has admitted its guilt and promised to carry out the Kremlin's orders in the future, the Japanese news agency Jiji said yesterday.

The reported decision—a complete reversal of a defiant stand against Cominform criticisms—was made by 200 party leaders, the agency said.

A full confession of error was made by Sanzo Nosaka, second-ranking Japanese Communist and long-time associate of Mao Tze-tung. Nosaka was responsible for the party's go-slow policy under the occupation.

Truman Says Byrnes Can Do As He Damn Pleases in Race

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Reporter

Not that he needs it or wants it, but former Secretary of State James F. Byrnes will have to run for Governor of South Carolina without the blessing of President Truman.

A reporter started to ask Mr. Truman about Byrnes' candidacy at a White House news conference yesterday, saying:

"Do you have any comment on former Secretary Byrnes' entry into the political . . ."

Mr. Truman broke in to say that he had no comment. Then he let fly with this: Mr. Byrnes is a free agent to do as he damn pleases.

The assembled reporters were taken aback momentarily. Mr. Truman himself seemed to be surprised. Then the reporters burst into laughter, and the President joined in.

The sizzling remark served to point up anew the deterioration of the once-warm Truman-Byrnes friendship.

That friendship reached a peak in 1944 when the then Senator Truman went to Chicago to boom Byrnes for the Vice Presidential nomination, only to be chosen himself. It began to cool off before Byrnes had been Mr. Truman's

D. C. the Heart of Democracy? No, the Shame, Writer Asserts

Washington is a city "touted as the heart of democracy," yet its citizens are "deprived of the lifeblood of democracy: the right to vote."

This is the theme of an article, "Washington—Disgrace to the Nation," by Howard Whitman in the February issue of Woman's Home Companion, out today.

"Worse," says the article, there is "a fear of democracy, a dread lest democracy be turned loose in the District of Columbia and drive out special privilege."

The story charges the District government is "a morass of accretions, improvisations and confusions. It is doubtful if 10 percent of the members of Congress understand it themselves. There are over a hundred departments, divisions, agencies, subboards and miscellaneous bureaus—each with a finger in the pie.

"While local government has made remarkable strides over the country, the Capital City still fumbles like a low comedian trying to put up a deck-chair."

The article reports that the Senate-approved Kefauver home-rule bill has been blocked by a hostile House District Committee—"even this bread crumb of democracy was denied . . ."

Washington, as a result, "is a disenfranchised little protectorate where one million Americans are

Denfeld Case Charge Denied By Matthews

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Navy Secretary Francis Matthews denied yesterday that he is "untruthful" or "incompetent," as charged by a Senate critic, but put off any further comment on the accusation.

Meanwhile, in Boston, the man over whom the row developed—Admiral Louis E. Denfeld—formally announced his intention to retire from the Navy.

The ousted Chief of Naval Operations handed in his request for retirement at First Naval District headquarters but declined any further comment in the entire controversy.

Earlier, however, Denfeld backed the statement of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy (R., Wisc.) that he actually was issued his commission for a second term as CNO last fall.

McCarthy, in a Senate speech Wednesday, declared that Matthews had told the Senate Armed Services Committee that no legal obstacle exists to filling Denfeld's post as a commission "never was issued to him."

The Wisconsin Senator declared this was untrue and said it raised the question of whether Matthews was "incompetent or just plain untruthful."

Asked for comment yesterday morning, the Navy Secretary declared: "I am not untruthful and I am not an incompetent." Pressed for an explanation, he added:

"I am not going to make any statement until I have a chance to check the records, and determine the facts. I know what they are but I want to be sure they are accurate."

Late yesterday, aides sent down word the Secretary still was working on the statement and would not have it ready that day.

2 House Votes Beat Korea Aid; Slap at Truman

Defeat Regarded As Sign of Battles To Come, Reflection Of Policy on China

By Mary Spargo
Post Reporter

The House yesterday dealt the Administration a major defeat in foreign policy, by voting 193 to 191 to reject the 60-million-dollar aid to Korea bill.

On Capitol Hill the defeat was regarded as reflecting the growing rift between Democratic and Republican forces over foreign policy. Many observers believed the rejection of the Administration request on this item presaged further heavy battles to come.

It was evident that the Korean aid vote was closely tied in with the battle over United States policy in regard to China and Asia, where no bi-partisan policy as such was ever developed, but it is evident that bi-partisan support for any Administration foreign policy is weakening.

The House action came as a shock to Democratic leaders who had confidently predicted passage of the measure.

Sixty-one Democrats joined 131 Republicans and Representative Vito Marcantonio (A. L., N. Y.) in voting against the bill. Twenty-one Republicans and 170 Democrats voted for it.

The upset came after the Administration forces had narrowly squeaked through to victory, 194 to 190, on a motion to recommit the bill to the Foreign Affairs Committee.

The move to send the bill back to committee was made by Representative John M. Vorys (R., Ohio), who led the opposition. Vorys, a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, insisted the appropriation would be "money down a rathole" because Communist forces in North Korea might overrun United States-controlled South Korea at any time.

Officials of the House Foreign Affairs Committee said this was the first time either House of Congress has rejected a major Administration foreign policy measure since the arms embargo vote in 1939.

The Administration's chief hope of salvaging the program now would appear to be the winning of Senate approval and garnering of sufficient House votes when the measure is returned to that body.

The committee report on the measure stated that "such troops as this Nation has in Korea . . . are now about to be withdrawn."

The report added that "only an advisory mission will remain as a manifestation of this Government's military concern in Korea."

Republicans argued that the Girl Forsakes Railway Fortune To Live in Attic

Vancouver, British Columbia, Jan. 19 (AP).—A poor little rich girl who chose a $4.50-a-week attic room and a $20-a-week dish-washing job instead of the life of an heiress to a two-million-dollar Canadian Pacific Railway fortune was on her way home to Montreal tonight.

The Canadian Press today said it learned a 17-year-old girl detained here this week is Beverley Van Horne, great-granddaughter of Sir William Van Horne, one of the builders of the railway.

Here last night she stamped out a "No!" when asked if she was going home. Her flight from a fashionable home to a $4.50-a-week attic room was reportedly an attempt to "be herself." "She hated to be thought of as a two-million-dollar piece of property. She wanted to draw her own paycheck and have her own friends," a friend said.

Hearing on Bill

Aged Pension Goal Set at 86% of Nation

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

Arthur J. Altmeyer, Social Security Commissioner, yesterday urged Congress to extend old age insurance to 86.6 percent of the Nation's workers or to 55,300,000 employed or self-employed.

This is 9,600,000 more than would be covered under the House Bill passed last year and 20,300,000 more than the 35 million covered by the present law.

The categories that Altmeyer's program—which is President Truman's program—would cover include: farmers (self-employed), about five million; hired farm help, 2.2 million; nonfarm self-employed, such as barbers, plumbers, beauty shop operators, grocers, etc., 1.5 million and domestic help about 900,000.

This is the first time the Administration has revealed just what categories and how many employed not now covered by Social Security it would include.

Higher Benefits Favored

Altmeyer also recommended that payments to retired workers and their dependents be increased. At present payments amount to 40 percent of the first $50 of a worker's monthly wages, plus 10 percent of the remainder up to $250, plus 1 percent a year for each year the worker was insured.

The Administration would increase this to 50 percent of the first $100 of a worker's monthly pay, plus 15 percent of the remainder up to $400, plus 1 percent a year for each year the worker was covered.

The bill recently passed by the House would be 50 percent of the first $100, plus 10 percent of the remainder up to $300, plus ½ of 1 percent for each year of coverage.

In arguing for the Administration program, Altmeyer pointed out that in strictly farming States the number of persons on relief are higher than in States where there are more workers in insured occupations.

Variations Among States

Today an average of 58.4 percent of all employed workers are covered by Social Security's old age insurance. However, in four farm States, North and South Dakota, Arkansas and Mississippi, less than 30 percent are covered by old age insurance.

Senator Eugene D. Millikin (R., Colo.) asked how much persons 65 years old can now earn monthly and still receive benefits. Altmeyer said that at present the limit is $15, although the House bill would raise this to $50 for those up to 75 years old and remove all earnings limits after that. He added that most employers at present are "very reluctant to take on workers in the middle 40s" because of fear of future liabilities when the worker is unable to continue. If the retirement was fixed so that more would retire in their early 60s, he said, there would be more jobs for those in their 40s.

By The Associated Press

Faced with an almost certain bolt by southern Democrats, President Truman said yesterday he has been assured of victory in a critical test that could jeopardize his "fair deal" program.

The test is due today with a House vote on a significant change in its legislative rules.

Mr. Truman told his news conference the forecast of an Administration triumph came from Chairman Sabath (D., Ill.) of the House Rules Committee during a conference at the White House.

The President said Sabath assured him he had the votes to beat down a resolution sponsored by a coalition of Republicans and Dixie Democrats on the Rules Committee to repeal the so-called 21-day rule.

GOP Seeks Adjournment

House Speaker Rayburn (D., Tex.) likewise told newsmen he felt confident the resolution would be defeated.

Rayburn predicted the issue would be settled today, despite a heralded Republican atempt to adjourn imemdiately when the House meets at noon.

He conceded that the Administration will lose "a considerable number" of Democrats, but indicated he hopes to pick up votes from Republicans who might fear that a vote for the rules change would be construed as a vote against civil rights.

Rayburn accused Republicans of wanting to change the rules later—after a vote on civil rights—because, he said, "they want to sabotage the President's whole program."

The present rule which was put limit on how long the House Rules into effect last year sets a 21-day Committee can block a bill from reaching the House floor. If the rule is repealed, a majority of the committee could sidetrack any legislation almost indefinitely.

Truman Calls It Backward Step

Asked how he felt about the proposed change, Mr. Truman called it a backward step and he commented: "I'm against it, period."

Sabath told reporters he had the President's "full support" in the showdown battle.

"The President feels that important progressive legislation should not be bottled up by the resolution which would restore the control the Rules Committee lost last year," Sabath said.

The committee is dominated by Southern Democrats and Republicans. They hold a 2-to-1 margin over Truman Democrats—if the Dixie-GOP bloc pulls together.

A Southern spokesman, Representative Winstead (R., Miss.), called the rules fight a "life or death" struggle on the issue of civil rights.

"If the South stands together, we stand a good chance of changing the rule," Winstead told a reporter. "That is our best and perhaps only weapon to fight FEPC and other civil rights proposals.

"Any Southerner who refuses to vote for the rules change is nothing less than a traitor to the people he represents."

Although Administration leaders appeared confident of forcing a vote today, Republican strategists still hoped to put it off until next week.

Their aim is to delay the fight over rules until after Monday so that repeal of the 21-day rule would not interfere with calling up a fair employment practices commission (FEPC) bill. The measure is designed to curb job discrimination on account of race or religion.

Bill Would Bar Officials' Wives From U. S. Pay

To provide for "a little more equitable distribution of Government jobs," Representative Williams (D., Miss.) yesterday offered a bill to force either husband or wife from the Federal payroll if one makes over $5000 or they top $7500 together.

Calling his move "a trial balloon to see what the reaction is among Government workers and others," Williams said he had no individuals in mind and no idea of how many would loose their jobs if the bill became law.

Another provision would bring dismissal to both husband and wife if either one didn't quit, once the law applied to them. Excepted would be elected officials, those subject to Senate confirmation and certain military personnel.

Rep. Whittington Will Not Seek Reelection

Representative Whittington (D., Miss.), who has represented the Third District of his State for 26 years, announced yesterday he will not seek reelection.

"I have definitely decided not to be a candidate for reelection," he said in a statement.

"Profoundly grateful for the privilege of representing the district for 26 years, as I approach my seventy-second birthday on May 4, 1950, I make the announcement of retirement at the expiration of my present term to give ample time for the nomination and election of my successor."

Senate Beats Drive to Vote On Excise Cut

By the United Press

Senate Democrats yesterday beat down, 45 to 35, a Republican atempt to force an immediate vote on cutting Federal excise taxes.

The vote came on a motion by Senator Harry P. Cain (R., Wash.) to take up immediately a bill that would cut the excises on jewelry, furs, admissions and other items back to their 1942 levels.

Senate Republicans voted solidly for the motion. The Democrats were solid against it with the exception of Senator Pat McCarran (D., Nev.), a frequent bolter of the Administration line.

Cain made the attempt as new demands for tax cuts and budget reduction erupted in Congress among both Democrats and Republicans.

Senator John L. McClellan (D., Ark.) introduced a bill to set up a special Senate-House committee to guide Congress in cutting President Truman's $42,439,000,000 budget for fiscal 1951.

Chairman Tom Murray (D., Tenn.) of the House Postoffice Committee protested that Mr. Truman's budget proposal for a 395-million-dollar increase in postal revenue would mean "prohibitive" rates and diminishing returns.

Representative Carl T. Curtis (R., Nebr.) told the House that, with revenue estimated at 37 billion dollars, Congress should cut the budget to 22 billion dollars and split the rest—"$7,500,000,000 on the national debt and $7,500,000,000 to reduce taxes."

Cain began his move with a speech in which he said a promise by Democratic Leader Scott W. Lucas that it will come up later means "absolutely nothing."

GOP Policy Group Agrees on 1950 Platform

By the United Press

Policy chieftains of the Republican National Committee agreed yesterday on a general statement of principles and a 16-plank platform for this year's congressional campaigns.

Chairman Guy G. Gabrielson declined to make them public until they have been submitted to similar policy committees composed of Republican Senators and Congressmen.

He said, however, the platform includes plans on economy in government, taxes, foreign policy, farm problems, veterans, national defense, natural resources, foreign trade, social security, and the controversial national health insurance program.

Broad outlines of the campaign-year declaration were agreed upon at the end of a two-day meeting of a 15-member policy group of the national committee.

Gabrielson said their decisions on every subject were unanimous. He said their agreements now will be reduced to platform language for submission to the Senate and House policy committees.

The Senate committee, headed by Robert A. Taft of Ohio, also had a brief meeting yesterday. It will meet again Monday. Taft said the members agreed to write a policy statement that will be "as short as possible and specific in the things we deal with."

The House committee, headed by Representative Joseph W. Martin, jr. (Mass.) is expected to meet next week.

The three groups then will coordinate their ideas.

Gabrielson said he hopes that a "tripartite agreement on policy" will be ready by February 4—two days before the Republicans formally launch their 1950 campaign with a $1-a-basket Lincoln's birthday supper here.

He said they will produce a statement that will win votes in the November election and restore the party to control of Congress next year.

Russians Walk Out Of U. N. Atom Talks

Lake Success, Jan. 19 (AP).—Russia broke up the secret atomic control talks in the United Nations today by walking out of a six-power meeting after the West once more refused to oust Nationalist China. This was Russia's ninth boycott on U. N. bodies in less than two weeks and the first that actually stopped the works.

Soviet walkout-boycott tactics also were carried out during the day at U. N. sessions in New York and Geneva and at a meeting of the 13-nation Far Eastern Commission in Washington where the Russians tried without success to get the Natonalist Chinese kicked out.

Assistant Secretary of State John D. Hickerson repeated Western charges Russia alone is preventing agreement on atomic control.

Hickerson told reporters the five majority delegates would continue atomic conversations, but that "I am not kidding myself" into thinking any progress could be made with the Russians absent.

There were two other Russian protests today against the Na-

In New York the Soviet delegation to the Military Staff Committee marched out of the committee room in angry protest against the Chinese presiding officer for this month. The Russians boycotted the first meeting of the Trusteeship Council in Geneva during the day.

After walking out and boycotting the nine U. N. organs that have met thus far this year in the continuing campaign against Nationalist China, the Russians made clear they would keep up the same tactics until the Nationalists are thrown out of the United Nations.

The five delegates remaining in the atomic meeting were the United States, France, China, Britain and Canada. They asked Secretary General Trygve Lie to send the record of the meeting to all the 59 United Nations.

A communique was issued saying that "so long as the Soviet government refuses to participate in these consultations, it is impossible for them to achieve the primary purpose of the mandate given to the six powers by the General Assembly.

"They will, of course, remain in close contact with one another and will meet and consult with each other on such limited objectives as are possible of achievement in the circumstances."

McGhee Speaks

British Aid To South Asia Wins Praise

Assistant Secretary of State George C. McGhee expressed warm approval last night of the decision of the British Commonwealth foreign ministers to help the Communist-threatened countries south of China.

This was the first official American comment on the conference of Commonwealth ministers which ended at Colombo, Ceylon, last week. McGhee was addressing the press institute of the North Carolina Press Association at Chapel Hill, N. C.

Recalling that the Commonwealth ministers had agreed to work out a program of economic aid to south and southeast Asia, McGhee said:

"The United States applauds this decision and finds hope in the spirit of humanity with which it was adopted.

"Many elements must be combined to bring about success for an undertaking of the magnitude envisaged at Ceylon. Essential elements which are lacking in individual States can be provided through a pooling of resources in a common effort.

"The United States wishes the Commonwealth nations success in the high endeavor upon which they have embarked on their own initiative in south and southeast Asia. We on our part are ready to adapt our own efforts in furtherance of this endeavor."

Korean Aid Bill Rejected

north Korean Communists had only to swoop down upon southern Korea and seize and make use of whatever supplies might be sent there under this measure.

Democrats argued that Koreans should be given American help because they have the will to fight off Communist aggression.

Representative Christian Herter (R., Mass.) said he had "serious doubts' about the bill but supported it because "if we withdraw, no witness can testify there will not be economic chaos."

Talking almost in a prophetic vein, Ambassador-at-large Philip C. Jessup a short time ago warned the Koreans that they have to help themselves and could not count on American aid to do everything for them.

When Will Russia Move?

Vorya declared that Korea now exists "solely through the sufferance of Russia," and added, "it is not whether but when Russia will move in."

The North Korean Communists reportedly have organized a "people's army" which could move into South Korea on Russia's orders.

Representative Adolph J. Sabath (D., Ill.) told the House he was "authoritatively informed" that there is little reason to fear Russian aggression against Korea.

"There is no such danger," Sabath said flatly.

Before rejecting the bill the House defeated a motion by Representative Monroe M. Redden (D., N. C.) to provide that two-thirds of the authorized funds be spent to buy surplus agricultural commodities.

House Cuts Appropriation

The House adopted an amendment by Chairman John Kee (D., W. Va.) of the Foreign Affairs Committee cutting the appropriation authorized from $150,000,000 to sixty million dollars. This is in addition to sixty million dollars authorized last year.

The House also adopted an amendment by Representative Jacob Javits (R., N. Y) limiting the authorization to June 30, 1950. Kee described the amendment as unnecessary but unobjectionable.

Miss Truman to Wed

Pakistan Accuses U. N. Of Favoring New Delhi

Karachi, Pakistan, Jan. 19 (AP). An angry Parliament today accused the United Nations of failing to give Pakistan a fair deal on the Kashmir issue. One delegate said he would rather see the former princely state in Soviet hands than have it go to India.

Premier Liaquat Ali Khan warned that a war between Pakistan and India over the disputed area might "engulf the whole world."

Sir Firoz Khan Noon declared the UN is under British and American influence and accused the two nations of favoring India over Pakistan.

Peiping Appoints Head Of 'Delegation' to U. N.

Tokyo (Friday), Jan. 20 (U.P.)—The Peiping (Communist) Radio today announced that Chinese Politburo member Chang Wen-pien has been named head of a Sino-Red delegation to the United Nations in expectation of early accreditation.

The broadcast said Foreign Minister Chou En-lai telegraphed the United Nations Secretary-General of the appointment. It said Chang would represent China on the Security Council.

Divers Report

Mighty Mo's Propellers Undamaged

CAPT. W. D. BROWN
Mighty Mo's Skipper

Norfolk, Va., Jan. 19 (AP).—The grounded battleship Missouri's propellers are undamaged, Navy divers reported today.

Their report followed an inspection of the propellers of the Mighty Mo, which has been held fast in a prison of sand and mud since she ran aground Tuesday morning near Old Point Comfort.

The Army Engineers dredge Comber continued today the job of cutting a trench from the battlewagon's stern to the main ship channel, a half mile away. All but a small quantity of the Missouri's 2 million gallons of fuel oil was removed.

At 11 a. m. Friday the Navy will make its third attempt to free the ship. Two previous attempts, using the combined power of 14 tugs, did not move her one inch.

The number of tugs will be increased to 21 in Friday's try. Should the Missouri remain stuck, her ammunition and stores will be removed to lighten her further for still another attempt.

The Army dredge, in addition to sucking out a trench through which the tugs may tow the battleship back to the main ship channel, is dredging 34-foot-deep ditches on either side of the Missouri. When this operation is finished the Missouri will be resting on a mound of sand and mud. Divers then will blast the mound from beneath the ship's keel with water from the hoses having a nozzle pressure of 400 pounds per square inch.

Chinese Reds Capture U. S. Airline Aide

Hongkong, Jan. 19 (U.P.)—Chinese Communists in southwest China have captured an American flier.

Maj. Gen. Claire Chennault asked the State Department to intercede for release of Civil Air Transport Operations Chief Robert Buoll, 29, of Stockton, Calif., who was captured with a Puerto Rican mechanic and three Chinese radio operators when he landed in Mengtsz.

Buoll flew the first plane into Mengtsz, 40 miles north of the Indo-China border, after the Nationalists secured the area. He established a radio station but it went off the air that evening. The next day another plane reported troops entering Mengtsz from one side and other troops leaving from the other side.

Nationalist Blockade Extended to South Coast

Taipei, Formosa, Jan. 19 (AP). The Chinese Nationalists today declared the blockade of Shanghai is a success and extended it to the South China coast.

The new blockade, extending from the border of Indo-China east to Yangchiang, 150 miles southwest of Hongkong, was not as formally started as the Shanghai blockade, but the idea was the same.

Nationalist planes dropped 200,000 leaflets over the area, proclaiming it a danger zone and warning peaceful craft to avoid it if they wished to avoid "heavy and continuous air assaults."

Suit Hits Reich Dismantling

Suit was brought yesterday in District Court to prevent the State Department from permitting the destruction or dismantling of German industrial plants.

Bringing the action for the court order were Martin Opitz and Elsie Williamowski, both of New York City. They named as defendant, Dean Acheson, Secretary of State.

Opitz was identified as an American citizen who holds stock in numerous German industrial companies.

He challenged the dismantling as a violation of the Constitution in that there was no ratification of the action by the Senate, and as a violation of the ECA rules.

The suit charges the dismantling is adding a financial burden to American taxpayers and producing economic distress in Europe.

Rail Squabble

Reds Hint 2d Blockade In Berlin

Berlin, Jan. 19 (AP).—East German railway officials today hinted West Berlin may face another blockade of rail traffic, already slowed by an intersector squabble.

A United States spokesman said, "If anything is done it will be directed, of course, by the Russians. If they have obtained enough supplies from the West since the blockade ended last May, then it could happen again. The Communists have whipped up their anti-West propaganda campaign remarkably in recent weeks."

Erwin Kramer, deputy chief of the system, told a news conference interzonal railway traffic through the city may be affected. Steam trains use the elevated system, which went off schedule soon after West Berlin police entered the railway headquarters building Tuesday.

Saar Premier Seeks to Avoid German Rule

Saarbruecken, the Saar, Jan. 19 (AP).—The premier of the coal-producing Saar said today his people wont to continue to be detached from Germany.

Premier Johannes Hoffman made the statement in the territory's parliament, which has before it two bills to strengthen its internal security.

Premier Hoffman said the people of the Saar are behind him and his government in an effort "to rebuild our house destroyed through past folly."

Frankfurt, Germany, Jan. 19 (AP). Chancellor Konrad Adenauer indicated today his West German government may ask for a referendum on the future control of the Saar.

Bonn Eases Rationing

Bonn, Jan. 19 (AP).—The West German government decided today to suspend rationing and price control of gasoline effective February 1. Sugar is the only commodity remaining on the ration list.

Bulgaria Orders U.S. Envoy Out

The demand was made in a note to the Yugoslav Embassy, the Bulgarian Press Agency announced.

It charged that Ambassador Josip Djardja, First Secretary Marko Vuyatic and Consul General Svetozar Savic were involved in espionage and assassination plots directed by Traicho Kostov, executed former No. 2 Communist.

The strongly-worded note said the three diplomats "must immediately leave the country." It said "functionaries in the Yugoslav Embassy in Sofia have occupied themselves with enemy espionage activity."

Bulgaria renounced its treaty of friendship with Yugoslavia in October in the feud between Yugoslavia and Cominform countries.

At the time, Bulgaria accused Yugoslavia of violating the treaty by maintaining a "hostile" attitude toward this country.

U. S. Hints of Western Plan To Ignore Soviet on Austria

By The Associated Press

The State Department hinted yesterday the Western Powers might go ahead without Russia and try to work out an Austrian treaty of independence.

Blaming the Soviets for a stalemate over an Austrian settlement, the department doubted "further progress can be made" toward getting Russia to agree of treaty terms.

A formal statement added that "under the circumstances, consideration will be given to future appropriate action that may be taken to reestablish Austrian freedom and independence in accordance with the publicly stated policy of this Government."

American, British and French Ambassadors met Tuesday with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko at Moscow, but received no assurances the negotiations could proceed, the department said.

[The United Press reported from London that negotiations were postponed anew yesterday because of Soviet refusal to abandon delaying tactics.

[Big Four Foreign Minister's deputies were slated to confer Friday, but the meeting was put off until next Tuesday.

[United States, French and British deputies asked for the delay after Deputy Foreign Minister Gromyko refused to assure them Russia would try to speed negotiations.

[The Western negotiators wanted the postponement to consult their governments for new instructions. The Russian deputy agreed.]

5 Dead, 3 Missing In Colorado Blaze

Colorado Springs, Colo., Jan. 19 (U.P.).—The total of dead in the Camp Carson-Broadmoor fire rose to five today as military authorities searched for three other missing soldiers.

Three solders burned critically while fighting the flames which destroyed or damaged more than 30 buildings at the Army camp died last night.

They were hurt fighting a brush fire that swept over a 20-square-mile area south of here Tuesday.

U. S. to Vote for Rescinding Ban on Franco

ter had been covered in Kee's long and carefully prepared speech on Spain in the House on January 9. But the Senate committee evidently thought it necessary to get the Secretary himself on record, in the hope of deflecting some of the current criticism on the Spanish issue.

At the start of his letter the Secretary complained of some of the criticism.

"The Spanish question," he wrote, "has been magnified by controversy to a position among our present-day foreign policy problems which is disproportionate to its intrinsic importance. Organized propaganda and pressures have kept this controversy alive both here and abroad and have served to stimulate more emotional feeling than rational thinking."

Acheson recalled that the U. N. resolution was "intended as a gesture of disapproval and an attempt to bring about a change in the Spanish government," but only had the effect of strengthening the Franco regime in the eyes of the "proud people" of Spain.

"In our view," he wrote, "the withdrawal of ambassadors from Spain as a means of political pressure was a mistaken departure from established principle . . . By attaching moral significance to the refusal to maintain full diplomatic relations with Spain, this action has also implied moral significance to the maintenance of full diplomatic relations through the return of ambassadors."

Of course, the Secretary pointed out, no question of "recognition" is involved, since the United States has kept an embassy in Spain ever since Franco finally won the civil war in 1939. He added that the United States had frequently called for admitting Spain to U. N. specialized agencies.

Restating the American attitude toward Spain, Acheson made three general points: (1) "there is no sign of an alternative to the present government; (2) the Franco regime has strong support within the country, and (3) Spain should not be permanently isolated from normal relations with the rest of western Europe.

Still, he reminded the congressional leaders, Spain is "unacceptable" to many western European nations as a partner in the Marshall Plan, the Council of Europe and other cooperative projects which aim at strengthening the "democratic way of life." He said Spain herself must take the necessary steps toward restoring civil liberties, religious freedom and the "elementary rights of organized labor."

As for economic aid to Spain, he said the United States was "quite prepared to acquiesce" in Export-Import Bank credits "covering specific and economically justifiable projects," but not in a general loan for the Spanish government to use as it sees fit.

The letter ended with a reminder that the Spanish government itself had shown no interest in easing its exchange controls or its restrictions on foreign investment.

The five nations which now have ambassadors in Madrid are Argentina, Bolivia, Dominican Republic, Nicaragua and Peru; the five that have ministers heading their missions there are El Salvador, Haiti, Iceland, Lebanon and Paraguay. Those that have announced their intention of restoring full diplomatic relations are Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Egypt and Iraq.

Lake Success, N. Y., Jan. 19 (U.P.). Secretary Acheson's statement on Spain was viewed here tonight as a green light for a formal Latin-American resolution at the next General Assembly for rescinding the ban on ambassadors to Madrid. It was possible the question of returning ambassadors to the Spanish government would come up this spring, since a special Assembly session on Jerusalem at that time has been predicted for some time.

An American spokesman said the United States was not going to take the initiative in introducing a resolution to kill the 1946 sanctions against Madrid. A British spokesman reiterated his country's stand that it would abide by the U. N. resolution as long as it stood.

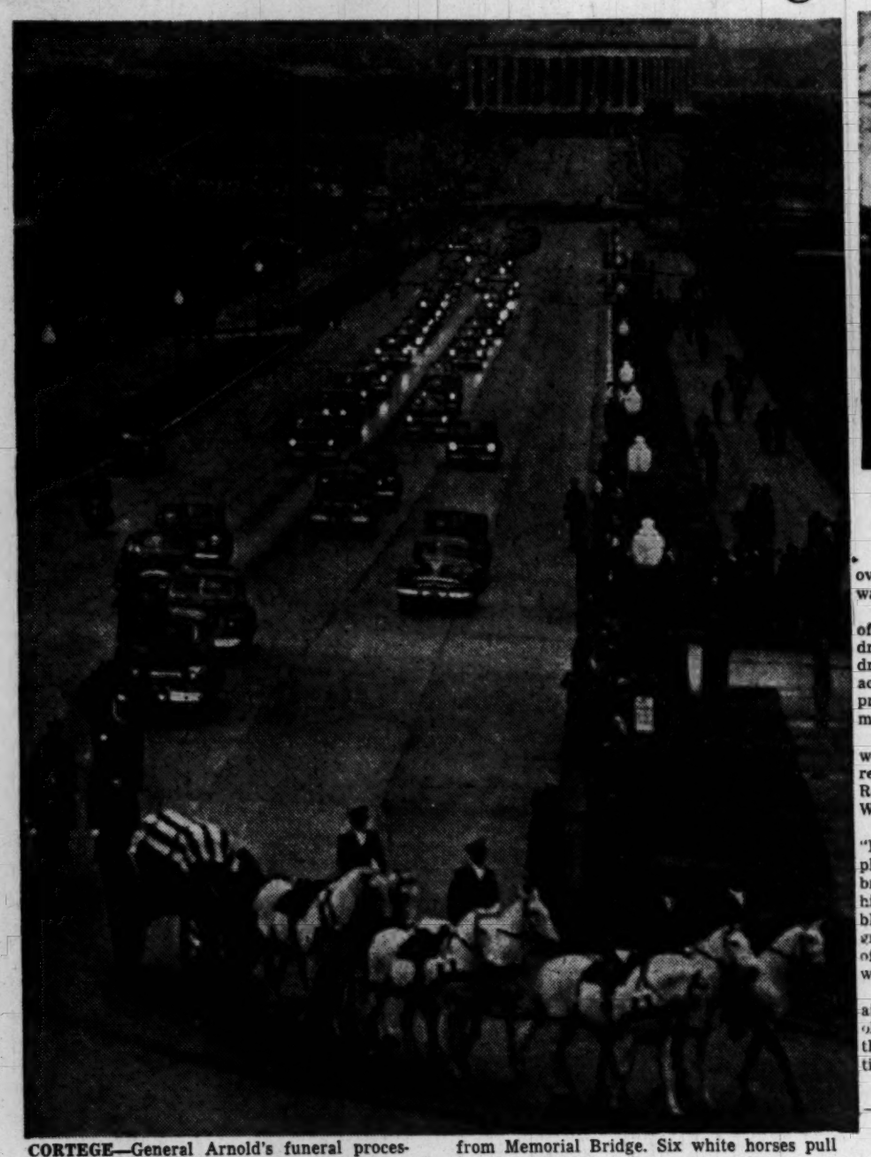
General Arnold Buried at Arlington as All Services Pay Him Honor



CORTEGE—General Arnold's funeral procession approaches Arlington National Cemetery from Memorial Bridge. Six white horses pull the caisson carrying his casket

"y ' ' arles DelVecchio—The Washington Post

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

General of the Air Force Henry H. Arnold was buried in Arlington Cemetery yesterday in a mounting snowstorm which grounded a memorial flight by the aircraft to which his life had been dedicated.

When the bronze casket bearing the body of the wartime commanding general, Army Air Forces, was lifted into a hearse at Washington Cathedral shortly after 1 p. m., flurries of sleet were falling from low gray clouds.

After removal from the Cathedral, where it had lain in State two days following General Arnold's death Sunday morning at his Sonoma, Calif., ranch, the body was borne to 15th st. and Constitution ave. where it was transferred to the traditional caisson drawn by six white horses. There the caisson waited, while a procession of men and women of all the services moved west on Constition ave.

By the time the casket had been borne into the amphitheater at Arlington, sleet was beating down steadily. Services at the graveside were conducted in a snowstorm which veiled the tent over the grave and muffled the words of the officiating chaplain.

At the amphitheater, President Truman, flanked by Secretary of State Dean Acheson and Defense Secretary Louis Johnson, sat in the open, where the sleet and snow forced him to remain covered during most of the service. Behind the dais on which the flag-draped casket rested during the service were ranks of honorary pallbearers, highly placed military and civilian officials who had been General Arnold's colleagues and associates during the years of World War II.

Mrs. Arnold, who has been ill, heard the service from a small room off the open court. The General's daughter and three sons sat in front of the court on stone benches which had been covered with blankets sent from Fort Myer.

Maj. Gen. Charles I. Carpenter, Chief of Air Force Chaplains, began the service with the Ninety-first Psalm: "I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress: my God; in Him I trust . . . For He shall give His angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways."

Then a brief prayer and a eulogy of "a great American . . . He dreamed dreams and brought those dreams to reality by spreading across the skies of the world the protective power of American airmen."

Services at the amphitheater were concluded, at Mrs. Arnold's request, with reading of Dr. Hugh Robert Orr's poem, "They Softly Walk."

Carried out to the strains of "Rock of Ages," the casket was placed on the caisson which had brought it up the steep Arlington hills from Washington, and rumbled through the snow to the grave near that in which General of the Armies John J. Pershing was buried in 1948.

An escort of soldiers, marines, airmen and West Point and Annapolis cadets preceded the caisson to the grave site and stood at attention.

There General Carpenter read the service for committal of an airman and read from the Gospel according to St. John these words:

"Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me. . . . I am the resurrection and the life, saith the Lord; he that believth in Me, though he were dead yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

Following the service, a salute of 19 guns was fired by artillery in the cemetery grounds and a squad of riflemen fired three volleys over the grave. Then, while smoke from the heavy guns, hanging low in the damp chill air drifted across the grave, a bugler sounded the haunting notes of taps and was echoed by another bugle beyond a little valley.

Secrecy on H-Bomb Seen Collapsing

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

The Administration's plan to keep the question of hydrogen-bomb construction out of public debate for a few more weeks appeared to be collapsing yesterday.

The hope had been that by strict secrecy on the momentous issue, President Truman could come to a decision on it free from pressure outside his own official family.

But yesterday, the public began to take sides—vocally.

For example: Representative Charles A. Eaton (R., N. J.), ranking minority member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, declared himself against building the H-bomb, and in favor, instead, of intensive negotiations for international atomic control.

From Los Angeles, on the other hand, came word from renowned physicist Arthur H. Compton that the United States should develop the bomb, despite moral objections of the scientists.

Mr. Truman himself, however, still refused to make any public statement on the matter. He was asked point-blank at his press conference whether he had construction of the H-bomb under consideration.

Gravely and very slowly he replied that he should not comment on that.

The President also gave a negative answer to a question on whether he was considering "direct negotiations" with Russia on the H-bomb.

His reply, however, could not be taken to rule out the possibility of some approach other than the "direct" one. In other words, further negotiations within the United Nations were not thereby branded as impossible.

The Chief Executive was also asked yesterday whether, as had been rumored, Commission Chairman David L. Lilienthal had offered to go to Russia to negotiate or discuss the matter.

He has not, Mr. Truman replied.

Representative Eaton's vigorous opposition to making the new type of bomb, with 100 to 1000 times the destructive capability of the earlier atom bomb, was voiced to a reporter.

"If any civilization is to be left, then the United States, Russia and all the nations of the world should get together and put a stop to it," he said.

"It looks to me like the human race is bent on destroying itself,"

College Senior Confesses Murder

EDWARD GIBBS, 25-year-old married GI Franklin-Marshall College student, was charged with murder in Lancaster, Pa., yesterday after confessing that he killed pretty Marian Baker, 21-year-old college secretary, 10 days ago. Gibbs, described as a model, church-going young man, signed a statement saying he choked and bludgeoned her "on an impulse," police said

Air Defense Plans Drafted By 25 States

Representatives of 25 States met here yesterday to learn their part in setting up a Nation-wide civilian air defense system.

Defense Secretary Johnson's civil defense aide told officials that civilian observers must be organized and trained "now" to be ready in the event of need.

Visual observation is necessary, Col. Barnet W. Beers said, to cover the "unavoidable blind spots" in the radar screen around the Nation's borders.

Military and civilian cooperation, Beers said, were thoroughly tested last September. These tests produced a broad program to tighten the Nation's defenses and provide maximum warning to the population in the event of air attack.

Art Gallery Is Televised In Color Test

By Jane Watson Crane
Post Reporter

"An Evening in the National Gallery" was presented last night as part of the extensive color television test the Columbia Broadcasting System is conducting in Washington this month.

It marked the first color broadcast from an art collection ever held anywhere. Appearing in the program, Director David Finley and Chief Curator John Walker expressed their faith in color television as a means of making works of art known to everyone.

"One of the great problems faced by museums," said Mr. Finley, "is how to make their collections known, so that people will want to come and see them and, if possible, will have before they come some knowledge of what they are going to see. Then they will be able not only to enjoy the works of art but to profit by them, because they will understand better what the artist has tried to say."

Concluding his introductory remarks, Mr. Finley then turned the program over to Miss Faye Emerson, who discussed the pictures. The script was written by Dr. Henry Cassirer, and the program developed in collaboration with Dr. Raymond Stites and Richard Bales of the National Gallery staff. The aim was to present art as a part of life. Interludes of music and dance relating to the paintings were introduced; also styles of the period and modern adaptations.

Eleven paintings were shown and two sculptures. There were also several reproductions in color. Among the paintings were "Gentlemen in Adoration" by Moroni; "Portrait of a Youth," by Botticelli; "Portrait of a Woman," by Catena; "Game of Hot Cockles," by Fragonard; "Dancing Couple," by Jan Steen; "Still Life," by Cezanne, and "Dancer," by Renoir. Sculptures were a bust of the Italian Aretino and the "Head of a Child" by Della Robbia, a glazed ceramic in blue and green. Reproductions included "La Mousme" by Van Gogh and "Portrait of a Lady" by Roger Van Der Weyden.

Defense Sums Up in Hiss Trial

New York, Jan. 19 (NYHT).—Defense counsel in the second Alger Hiss perjury trial summed up today with the contention that the documents Hiss is accused of giving Chambers in 1938 actually were given to him by other persons, "confederates" of Chambers.

Thomas F. Murphy, assistant United States attorney, will sum up for the prosecution at 10 a. m., Friday. Judge Henry W. Goddard will give the case to the jury after the luncheon recess.

Claude B. Cross, in a five-hour address to the jury, said some of the documents came from Henry Julian Wadleigh, former employe of the State Department's trade agreements section, who admitted giving documents to Chambers. He said other documents were provided by an unnamed person in the Far Eastern division of the State Department, and referred to the name of "Lovell," previously described as a Communist by Chambers, as a possibility. He added he was not making any accusation against Lovell.

Cross contended the typewriter papers in the case could not have come from Hiss because in many cases he did not have access to the documents on which they were based.

Cross accepted the Government's contention that these papers were typed on a Woodstock typewriter once owned by Hiss, but he asserted that even the testimony of George Roulhac, produced by the Government as a rebuttal witness, showed the typewriter passed out of Hiss' possession at about the time of the last date on the papers, while the testimony of Raymond and Perry Catlett, defense witnesses, indicated Hiss gave them the machine at an earlier date. Cross suggested the memory of the Catlett brothers might be more accurate than that of Roulhac.

Cross contended Chambers fabricated the typewritten papers in May or June of 1938, just before he gave them to Nathan Levine, his wife's nephew, for safekeeping. He read a letter written by Chambers in July, 1938, which referred to an otherwise unexplained "project" Chambers said he had undertaken in Washington at that time.

Cross cited testimony he said indicated Chambers had "prepared a file" of material relating to Francis B. Sayre, then Assistant Secretary of State, and Charles Darlington, then assistant chief of the trade agreements section, to be used "as a cover" in case "any finger of suspicion ever pointed toward Julian Wadleigh as a thief of papers from the trade agreements section."

Cross argued that Chambers prepared a similar "file" on Hiss, and lumped it with the papers he got from Wadleigh to support his accusation against Hiss.

Lawyers Guild Again Requests Probe Into FBI

The National Lawyers Guild yesterday renewed an earlier request to President Truman for an investigation of what it considers illegal and "political police" activities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The guild is a left-of-center lawyers' group and is alleged by the House Un-American Activities Committee to be a Communist front. It sent its request to Mr. Truman along with a detailed analysis of the FBI documents that were made public at the first trial of Judith Coplon.

The guild's analysis of the reports, in which it seeks to document its charges about FBI activity, such as illegal wiretapping, will be made public Monday.

News to Mr. Truman

Its request for an inquiry into FBI practices had not, apparently, reached Mr. Truman at the time of his press conference yesterday. He told an inquirer he had not heard of of the guild's communication to him.

Guild president Clifford J. Durr, in a press conference of his own, took cognizance of a letter made public the night before by Representative Richard M. Nixon (R., Calif.). In it, Nixon, a member of the Un-American Activities Committee, asked its chairman, Representative John S. Wood (D., Ga.) to investigate the guild.

This, said Durr, was "considerably less than subtle." The letter was released by Nixon, Durr said, when the heard of the guild's intent to demand a study of the FBI. It was a "maneuver to distract attention from the issue."

Calls Probe Now Meaningless

Since the committee already had pronounced its judgment on the guild many years ago, Durr said, an investigation of it at this late date "would be a rather meaningless ceremony." In March, 1944, the committee cited the guild as a Communist-front organization, and said it was Communist-operated.

Durr, a former member of the Federal Communications Commission, said he thought wider knowledge of the guild and its activities, all available, he claimed, in public statements, would be a good thing. And, he added, "a wider public knowledge of the activities of the FBI is a vital thing."

Assembly Gets Nearby Politics Bill

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

Richmond, Va., Jan. 19.—A bill was introduced in the Virginia House of Delegates today to permit Federal employes to hold office in Fairfax County, Alexandria and Falls Church.

The measure would exempt Federal employes from a State law prohibiting them from holding public office in Virginia. It was proposed by Delegates Edwin Lynch, of Falls Church and Fairfax County, and Armisted L. Boothe, of Alexandria.

Arlington County now enjoys such an exemption from the State law.

Last November, the Civil Service Commission cleared the way for Federal employes in Fairfax County to hold office in the county board of supervisors and about 38 nonpartisan and appointive positions. This move exempted the Federal workers from the Federal Hatch Act.

Lynch explained that his bill would clear the way on a State law level.

In a bill introduced by State Senator Charles R. Fenwick, of Arlington, the Medical College of Virginia would be given authority to establish seven annual $1000 scholarships for dental students. The students however, must agree to practice in rural communities for the same number of years they receive assistance.

An eighth scholarship on the same basis would be offered by the Virginia State College for Negroes.

At present, the State offers 20 medical scholarships, each worth $1000, on terms similar to the ones proposed by Fenwick's bill.

Senator Andrew W. Clarke of Alexandria continued to outstrip all other legislators from nearby Washington in the number of bills introduced when he dropped five more in the hopper today. They would:

Require the Virginia Real Estate Commission to publish annually a list of names and address of license-holders, and to publish semiannually a list of all persons whose licenses have been suspended or revoked within a year.

Repeal a law that permits fireworks to be set off on private property with consent of the property owner.

Authorize the Real Estate Commission to suspend or revoke licenses when its license holders are found guilty of: Making listing contracts without a definite termination date; not including broker or firm names and certificate numbers in advertising property for sale, rent or lease; or placing signs on property offering it for sale, rent or lease without written consent of the property owner.

Give Fairfax County members of the governing boards of district homes $10 a day, not to exceed $250 in any one year, while attending board meetings.

Permit Fairfax County to impose a $100 license tax on house trailers placed on property not owned by the trailer owner, and make it unlawful for trailer owners to remain on such property more than 48 hours without a license.

The four members of the House of Delegates from the area near Washington were named to 16 different standing committees. J. Maynard Magruder of Arlington will be chairman of the committee on interstate cooperation.

Speaker E. Blackburn Moore announced the following appointments:

Armistead L. Boothe of Alexandria general laws; counties, cities and towns; currency and commerce, and executive expenditures.

George Damm, of Arlington finance; education; militia and police, and public institutions.

Magruder, interstate cooperation; insurance, and banking; counties, cities and towns; House expenses, and Federal relations.

Lynch, agriculture; public property; manufactures and mechanic arts, and welfare.

plan in terms that left no doubt it was aimed directly against the political successes of nonpartisan voter organizations in his area. He told the Senate group preparing the bill:

"There is not anything right about a situation that prevents the Democrats and Republicans from participating in purely local Government, when the independents are entirely at liberty to do as they please about it, can carry on the most violent political campaigns, and do."

Within their States as "independents Federal employes have taken an increasing part in governmental affairs in nearby Maryland and Virginia counties.

In Montgomery County, Md., Federal employes participated in the fight to change the county government to a charter form of government, against the political opposition of both parties.

In Alexandria, Va., after considerable agitation by Federal employes, city residents have voted to permit nonpartisan elections, in which Federal employes may be candidates. The provision is included in the new city charter, which comes before this session of the Legislature for ratification.

In Arlington County, more than a half dozen citizens' groups, made up largely of Federal workers, led the fight for an elected school board, which was voted in by legislation, and which has become a special State law.

Also in the county, Federal workers are leading the fight for nonpartisan election of county board members. In the last election, Robert Cox, elected on a nonpartisan basis, brought the balance of power to the nonpartisan group. Three members of the five-man board, who were nominated and elected with nonpartisan support, are Federal workers.

In Senate debate, the Hatch Act change for the Washington area was backed by Senators A. Willis Robertson (D., Va.), Harry F. Byrd (D., Va.), and by Millard E. Tydings (D., Md.).

As it is now, said Senator Robertson, the civil service regulations governing local political activity by Federal workers in nearby Maryland and Virginia let a person do as he pleases as long as he calls himself an independent.

"He can agitate, he can electioneer, he can run for office, but the commission has held that if the civil service employe calls himself a Democrat or Republican he is beyond the pale," Robertson said.

Tydings, noting that Montgomery had gone Republican in the last two Presidential elections, said the revision of the Hatch Law for the area around Washington was not a partisan move.

Senator Byrd, recalling he had sponsored the language to cover local political activity by Government employes near Washington, said that the Civil Service arrangement was "way out of line."

He said the "nonpartisan" requirement in the Civil Service Commission regulation was "destructive" of the two-party system.

Sees No Political Advantage

Byrd said there was "nothing political" about the proposed change and he didn't expect to gain anything in a political way from adoption of the revision.

The Senate action was sharply criticized by Harley M. Williams, chairman of the Arlington Better Government League—backer of the nonpartisan election system in the county. He said the proposed change in the Hatch Act would be nullified by the combined application of other portions of the Hatch Law and of the Virginia State Democratic Party plan. He said the other Hatch Act selections prohibit party activity by Federal employes at the State and national level; while the Virginia Democratic Party plan requires local candidates to take an oath of support for State and National nominees of the party, other than President. He said this meant that local party political participation automatically involved State and National party participation, in Virginia.

In the Maryland and Virginia area, the local political participation plan applies to municipalities, counties, or other political subdivisions "in the immediate vicinity of the National Capital where 10 percent or more of the qualified voters are employed by the Federal or District Governments.

In other communities it applies where a majority of the qualified voters are Federal employes. The plan would permit taking part in local politics as candidate, manager, or individual. It would cover participation in primaries, conventions, or caucuses.

Haiti Names Hildreth U. S. Legal Counsel

Melvin D. Hildreth, 59-year-old Washington attorney and civic leader, has been named legal counsel of the Haitian government in the United States.

Hildreth

The appointment was made by President Dumarsais Estime of the Republic of Haita and announced here yesterday. Hildreth is to serve as "Counseiller Juridique de l'Ambassade d'Haiti a Washington.

To Attend Dedication

In this capacity he will fly to Haiti next month to attend the dedication of the United States Building at the Bicentennial Exposition being held in Port-au-Prince. The dedication, February 13, is to be addressed by Warren R. Austin, U. S. Representative in the United Nations Security Council.

Hildreth said yesterday President Truman is immensely popular with the Haitian people. He said a street in Port-au-Prince has been named Boulevard Truman.

In recognition of this honor, Hildreth said Truman sent a message of thanks to Haiti, reminding Haitians of their part in aiding America in the Revolutionary War. Truman's reply, he said, is to be carved in stone and placed along the boulevard.

Headed Inaugural Group

Hildreth, who served as chairman of the 1949 Inaugural Committee, has been a life-long Democrat. Born in Fargo, N. Dak., he came to Washington in 1919 to help form the Wilson Independent League and has remained to conduct a law practice, participate in Democratic party affairs, and aid the District home-rule movement.

Hildreth was a prime mover in organization of the Circus Fans of America, is a past president of the group, and during the depression played an active part in keeping the circus alive.

Married, Hildreth lives with his family at 4831 Indian Lane, Spring Valley.

Hildreth Sees Peril in D.C. Theater Policy

Melvin D. Hildreth yesterday charged that the policy of "New York interests" in demanding racial segregation in the legitimate theater here "is having a serious effect on our national security."

"If a fine representative of the Indian people can't see a play in Washington because of this policy, that has an effect on the Indian people; and their manganese is essential to us."

"If a representative of the Haiti government is refused admittance to our theater, then that has a bad effect on Haitians, and their bases are vital to the defense of our Panama Canal," Hildreth said.

He cited these examples as he made preparations to fly to England on January 26 to attend the anniversary celebration of the Bertram Mills Circus at the London Olympia.

While in England, he is going to look into the "open-door" nonsegregation policy maintained in 35 English legitimate theaters, he said.

Hildreth is a past president of the Circus Fans Association of America, and legal representative of the Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus. In London he will be the guest of Bernard and Cyril Mills, sons of the circus founder.

Hildreth also is chairman of a citizens committee for return of the legitimate theater to Washington.

Famed Test Pilot Dies as Plane Crashes

Chipley, Fla., Jan. 19 (AP). — Johnny Mann, famed test pilot, and a friend plunged to death last midnight while returning to his Los Angeles home from an unsuccessful attempt to break the nonstop Los Angeles-to-Miami light-plane record.

He gave up on his try for the record Saturday when his fuel ran low near Jacksonville, Fla. He went on, however, to Miami for the All-American air maneuvers. Dying with Mann was Deputy Sheriff Robert E. Milander, 42, of Los Angeles. No cause for the crash was learned.

Long-Awaited Report Advises Silver Spring to Stand Pat on Government

Silver Spring within the county framework on an economical basis.

So what's left? Silver Spring remains unincorporated and the county continues to perform the municipal functions. Not too terrible a plight, declares Ray.

"The resident of Silver Spring," he says, "need not shudder at continuing to cast his lot with the government of Montgomery County. The county is, and was before the charter, one of the best governed counties in Maryland. His obligation, as a citizen, is to work for the continued improvement of his government."

In the introduction of his report, Ray goes into the history of Silver Spring and Montgomery County and makes these observations that are pertinent to the survey:

1. All estimates of the population of Silver Spring run in excess of 50,000, and the community is growing rapidly.

2. The county council drew specific boundaries for the Silver Spring area in May, 1949, which would result in a specific population figure for the community in the 1950 census.

High Living Standard

3. Of the county's estimated 130,000 population, by far the greater portion lives within a distance of 10 miles from the District line.

4. The county has one of the highest standards of living of any county in the United States, and its literacy level is far above the national average.

In describing the present government of Montgomery County, Ray points out that the county government performs the functions of a city government in many respects.

But, he says, it has been difficult for the "traditional county government" to keep pace with the demand for municipal services brought on by population growth in the suburban area.

Because of this political lag, Ray reports, the Maryland General Assembly found it necessary to establish (1) the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission, with bi-county jurisdiction in the Maryland area suburban to Washington, in 1918, and (2) the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, which also has jurisdiction in the nearby portions of Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties, in 1927.

Commissions Outmoded

Ray makes it clear that he believes the time is fast approaching when these commissions must be discarded and their functions taken over by the county governments.

What are the alternatives for Silver Spring?

Ray says it is apparent that all of nearby Maryland is economically a part of Metropolitan Washington. This also holds true, he adds, for that portion of Virginia which is suburban to Washington.

"If political decisions could be made in a vacuum," declares Ray, "there would be little question but that all of these areas should be included in the District of Columbia."

But, he continues, "Marylanders and Virginians cannot be expected to consent to their being included in a district where no self-government is enjoyed. Such reforms could not be instituted without the consent of the governments at Annapolis and Richmond. This consent would obviously not be forthcoming."

City Principle Indorsed

Ray then takes up the so-called Maryland City plan under which all of the suburban Washington territory in Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties would be incorporated as a city.

The advantages?

"The need for the independent bicounty agencies, the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission, and the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, would be obviated," declares Ray.

"The many conflicts among municipal and county governments and the bicounty agencies would be resolved at one stroke. The appalling confusion of governmental functions and competencies automatically would be resolved. The citizen could look to one place for authority and responsibility.

"So compelling is the logic of this proposal that it calls for an independent formal recommendation in this report. It is hereby recommended that the Maryland area suburban to Washington be incorporated in one big city government with county status."

City Plan Unworkable

But Ray is forced to add this sad conclusion: "The obstacles which would arise would prove practically insurmountable."

His report states there are more than 25 incorporated towns and cities in Prince Georges County and 12 in Montgomery County, as well as many special improvement and taxing areas in both counties.

"Most of these," says Ray, "are located in the Washington metropolitan area . . . (and) these towns, cities and taxing areas could not be expected to surrender their autonomy without a struggle."

Ray says, too, that "the counties could hardly be expected to give up the tremendous tax resources of the metropolitan area."

"Organized county governments in the State of Maryland," he declared, "are in normal course extremely influential at the General Assembly in matters affecting their interests. They could almost certainly defeat a movement to establish Maryland City."

Other Objections

And there's still another obstacle to this plan, Ray hastens to add—"the widespread feeling in Montgomery County that Prince Georges County would prove to be a liability with its older residential areas, its less progressive political development, and its different attitudes toward alcoholic beverage controls and other matters."

Ray declines to assess the validity of this claim, but concludes that the Maryland City plan "would almost certainly meet overwhelming defeat in a referendum in Montgomery County. Indeed, the organized politics of Prince Georges County looks so distrustfully upon recent political reforms in Montgomery County that it conversely might refuse the merger for this reason alone."

Another alternative, Ray continues, is establishment of a metropolitan city for Montgomery County which would be be called Montgomery city and presumably would include the area from Cabin John and Glen Echo across the lower end of the county to Takoma Park.

City in County Discussed

"The theoretical advantages of such a city," says Ray, "are not nearly so convincing as in the case of a Maryland city. The bicounty problems would still exist, and the complex of relationships in the area suburban to Washington would not be substantially reduced."

Ray believes the incorporated towns of Takoma Park, Kensington, Garrett Park, Glen Echo, Rockville and others would oppose such a move, and he is certain the county government would fight incorporation of all the county's urban area in one city.

And such a move, too, he adds, would bring to fever-heat "the long-standing rivalry between the two incorporated communities of Bethesda and Silver Spring."

"This rivalry," he says, "might well prove to be the principal obstacle to the establishment of such a city."

So Ray is forced to conclude that the Montgomery City plan "is as unfeasible as the Maryland City proposal."

Separate City Plan

Now Ray takes up the proposal for Silver Spring to incorporate as a separate city and concedes there are good arguments on both sides of the proposition.

His reports points out that many advocates of cityhood for Silver Spring cite the fact that Alexandria, Va., likewise a suburb, is an incorporated city.

But, he reminds, Alexandria is one of long standing and, as in the case of all Virginia cities, exists independently of any county.

"In the State of Maryland," he says, "only the City of Baltimore exists outside the limits of some county. It has for a century enjoyed this special status."

He declares it is unlikely that the General Assembly would confer such special status on Silver Spring.

His conclusion "that efforts to incorporate Silver Spring with the county status would almost certainly meet insurmountable obstacles" and any further consideration must be incorporated "within the framework of Montgomery County."

Closer Contact Seen

The main arguments for incorporation, reports Ray, are "local desire for political self-expression" and the "chamber of commerce advantages."

He agrees, too, that it would offer closer contact with local governmental officials.

But he is not impressed by the claim that as an independent city Silver Spring would get a direct share of certain state funds. He doubts that as a city Silver Spring would get a larger share than it does now.

He takes up the case of Takoma Park, a city since 1890 that presents "the only comparable situation." But when he analyzes it, not much comparison remains. Takoma Park was established in another period, and its situation is unique in that it is a bi-county city, straddling the line between Montgomery and Prince George.

He finds the "most convincing answer" to the issue of cityhood for Silver Spring is in an assessment of the cost.

Under state law, he reminds, the major functions of education, health and welfare must be administered by the county. So the new city would have no voice in these functions.

Little Tax Relief

"The county tax rate of $1.90," says Ray, "the sanitary district tax of 10 cents, and the park and planning tax of 15 cents would all apply within the newly incorporated city.

"The only relief would be from the 20-cent suburban district tax, the 4-cent library tax and the 10-cent fire tax. The new city would, however, be required immediately to undertake to discharge all functions provided by these special taxes."

Ray reasons that the county tax rate would continue largely as at present and there would be much duplication of expense.

"Silver Spring," he states, "would need its own city hall, a municipal council, a finance establishment, and a duplication of election, street, police and other functions now performed by the county.

"The new city would have serious financial handicaps at the outset. It would have to accept an appreciable share of the county's 23-million-dollar debt."

Small Advantage

On the profit side of the ledger: it would inherit a good street system and other governmental functions as going concerns.

Would it not be true that if Silver Spring became a city and the county's governmental obligation reduced by a third the county tax rate could be trimmed a third?

Unhappily no, is Ray's answer, for "it would cost substantially more than two thirds of the present budget to perform the county functions for the remainder of the county after the Silver Spring third had withdrawn."

The municipal expert paints this gloomy picture for advocates of cityhood:

". . . it's citizens would continue to provide tax payments to provide police, streets, and other governmental services to Bethesda and other unincorporated areas in the county, while it had to pay separately for its own services.

Too Late For New City

"So disadvantageous does this proposition seem that one wonders why Rockville and Takoma Park have cherished their corporate status for these many years.

"The answer, of course, lies in the fact that these two cities existed as such long before the county began to perform municipal functions."

Ray says that theoretically there is "quite a convincing" argument against incorporation and that the ideal would be elimination of as many special arrangements as possible so that the responsibility for governmental programs can be placed clearly upon the governing body.

Pointing out that Baltimore County has few of the "special arrangements" found in Montgomery County he declares that "the goal for Montgomery County therefore, should be to reduce the number of governments rather than to complicate it further by the creation of new governments."

On cityhood for Silver Spring, this is Ray's answer:

"It would be practically impossible to establish and operate a City of Silver Spring within the framework of Montgomery County on an economical basis.

"If, however, the citizens of Silver Spring have a strong enough desire for autonomy to be willing to face the additional expense, then the issue assumes a political aspect and cannot be properly evaluated in a report of this kind."

There is a fifth alternative: to remain in the county in the present unincorporated status. This course, says Ray, "does have much to recommend it."

But, he warns, the county government must in due course meet its responsibilities, such as providing better fire protection and library service.

He urges eventual abolishment of the Suburban District and the other separate county functions, but foresees that this will kindle political fires in the county.

He says the "conflict of jurisdiction" among the county Department of Public Works and the Suburban Sanitary and the Park and Planning Commissions are perhaps the county's "most serious" problem of government.

"The county's political future bids fair to be stormy," says Ray in closing his report, "but not dark."

No, he concludes, Silver Spring could do worse—much worse—than continue to cast its lot with the county.

Public Forum Is Set On Dr. Ray's Report

The eagerly awaited report on government for Silver Spring was made public last night at a meeting of the Silver Spring Junior Chamber of Commerce in the Dispensary Building there.

Councilmen J. Douglas Bradshaw received a copy of the report from its author, Dr. Joseph M. Ray.

"I believe this report will stimulate considerable discussion in the suburban regions of the county," Bradshaw said. He added that "if no immediate results are realized, some good will come of it in the long run, as it will cause the people to think more about their government."

Judge Alger Y. Barbee, chairman of the chamber's survey committee, said the public would get a chance to discuss the report at a forum sponsored by the chamber on February 6. He also said that if enough public interest is engendered by the report, a referendum to sound out sentiment might be conducted through the newspapers.

Methodists Oppose Private School Aid

Cincinnati, Jan. 19 (AP).—The General Board of the Evangelism of the Methodist Church yesterday threw its weight in opposition to Federal aid to private and parochial schools.

The board consists of 46 bishops, ministers and laymen from all parts of the country.

Meeting here, the group declared its "Unswerving opposition" to such Federial aid and asserted "The American system of public education, available to youth of every church and creed, is essential to a further development of the American ideal."

The board said it did not deny the right of a church to establish its own schools but "we emphatically deny the right of such a church to demand support for its schools from Government funds."

Dr. Harry Denman of Nashville, Tenn., executive secretary of the board, suggested in another report that Protestants join, in their own way, with Catholics in the observance of 1950 as a holy year.

He suggested that Protestants "Knock on every door and tell the good news of a new life which can be found in Christ."

Methodists Urge Vatican Post Remain Unfilled

Cincinnati, Ohio, Jan. 19 (U.P.) The General Board of Evangelism of the Methodist Church unanimously approved a resolution today urging that President Truman appoint no successor to Myron Taylor, who resigned yesterday as the President's personal envoy to the Vatican. The resolution was introduced by Bishop W. Earl Ladder of the Syracuse, N. Y., area.

More Shipley School Space Is Promised

Enough extra classroom space will be provided for Arlington's Shirley School by February 1 to take third graders there off half-day sessions, School Superintendent William A. Early said yesterday.

He made the promise after a protest meeting Wednesday night of 92 parents from the Henry G. Shirley Homes development. They voted unanimously to keep their children out of school next month unless classroom facilities are increased. Arrangment to canvass 800 units in the project for support were also made.

Early said yesterday he expects to present the school board with specific plans to alleviate the Shirley School crowding this Saturday, but declined to discuss them until then.

Early also released a letter yesterday to Federal Housing Administration officials in Richmond, protesting the FHA s "recent demand" that the Arlington School Board pay rent for school space—now used free—at the Shirley and Ficket homes housing projects.

In his letter to State FHA Director A. R. Hansen, dated January 18, Early complained that the agency is asking $175 a month for present school rooms in the two developments, plus $110 monthly for two new classrooms "urgently needed" at Shirley.

Arlington is "being discriminated against" by this rent demand, Early said, since the Government provides free school space in other publicly-owned Virginia housing projects. FHA officials could not be reached for comment.

Charter Day Exercises Set At Maryland U.

Dr. H. C. Byrd, president of Maryland University, will discuss the institution's present and future at Charter Day exercises at 7 p. m. today in the university dining hall at College Park.

Byrd will be the principal speaker at the exercises, which Senator Millard F. Tydings and Judge William P. Cole, both university alumni, are expected to attend. In all, 1000 guests are expected for the banquet.

C. V. Koons, Washington attorney and president of the alumni association, will greet the guests. They also will be entertained by a humorous talk by Strickland Gillilan, humorist and poet.

Capital Transit's Music 'Piper' Battles Rival FM Stations

By John London
Post Reporter

Muzak, Inc., which pipes "functional" music by telpehone lines, and competitive FM radio stations are girding for a battle of survival, it was indicated here yesterday.

A number of FM stations throughout the country have cut into Muzak's business by broadcasting special programs of "functional" music—music unfettered by commercials and designed for particular types of users, such as factories, dentist's offices, restaurants.

Now Muzak is planning to retaliate. The firm's attorney, Paul A. Porter, disclosed he will ask the FCC next week to tell these FM stations they are violating FCC rules.

Then, Porter said, he will request a hearing to persuade the FCC to change its rules to allow such FM transmissions—so Muzak can switch from costly telephone-line transmission to the cheaper, higher fidelity FM transmission used by its competitors.

The Muzak idea is to eliminate radio competition or acquire the right to use the same FM techniques as its competitors.

Porter said the FCC told Muzak a few years ago the FM type of transmission violated FCC rules.

These are some of the current violations, said Porter: When broadcasting functional music, stations fail to identify themselves at intervals; fail to identify sponsors and recorded transcriptions, and fail to keep a balance between music and programs of educational and religious content. Also they use the "beep" system to eliminate commercials.

The "beep," a pulse sent out by the radio transmitter, has no effect on the ordinary home receiver. But the special receiver of a "functional" subscriber has a filter which, when activated by the beep, cuts out all human voices and all commercials.

Many of the 20-odd FM radio stations not in competition with Muzak will join in its petition to the FCC, Porter said. These are stations which happen to be run by people who have franchises to pipe Muzak by telephone lines in their own areas.

These and other FM radio stations have been "besieging" Muzak, Porter said, to "affiliate" and transmit background music by radio instead of telephone wires.

Some observers pointed out the Muzak petition may prove embarrassing to the FCC which has been trying to salvage money-losing FM stations. Many FM stations have been able to keep going only because of the revenue from the functional music programs.

Porter disclosed his plans for asking the FCC to issue a pronunciamento when he was questioned about the firm's decision, announced yesterday, not to renew its contract to supply records to WWDC—FM here for transit radio music. Accordoing to Porter, the withdrawal, effective in May, is because of the "public uproar" over music in streetcars and buses.

But Ben Strouse, general manager of the Capital Broadcasting Co., replied yesterday the withdrawal had nothing to do with the transit furore. He said it was really because of FM radio's threat to "Muzak's beautiful little monopoly in the functional music business."

Strouse said WWDC-FM is considering entering the functional music field, possibly as a license of some organization like Functional Music, Inc., "and Muzak knows it." FMI was organized in Chicago and hands out franchises to area distributors as Muzak does.

Muzak has some 75 franchise "studios" (distributors) in about 200 cities in this country, Canada, Mexico, Puerto Rico, and the Hawaiian Islands, Porter said.

The Gallup Poll

Advertising Adds Interest To Newspapers

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

Princeton, N. J., Jan. 19.—An overwhelming majority of newspaper readers, and particularly young readers in their 20s and 30s, think that advertising adds interest to newspapers.

Radio commercials get a much less favorable vote in terms of interest.

Throughout the nation a corps of interviewers for the Institute put a series of questions to adults about their interest in advertising in newspapers and magazines and over the radio. The study brought out these highlights:

1. People who have had a college education say that radio commercials take away from their interest in broadcasts, but that advertising in newspapers and magazines increases their interest in those media.

2. Young adults between the ages of 21 and 30 are almost evenly divided in their attitudes toward radio commercials but give the highest vote of any age group in favor of newspaper advertising.

3. In general, women are much more inclined than men to think that advertising adds interest to publications or radio.

The survey, conducted by the Institute's new "time-place" method of area or probability sampling, put three questions to the cross-section of adults covered.

First question:

"Do you think the advertising in newspapers adds to or takes away from your interest in them?"

The second question:

"Do you think the advertising on the radio adds to or takes away from your interest?"

Finally, this question:

"What about magazines? Do you think the advertising in magazines adds to or takes away from your interest in them?"

Here is the national vote, for each medium:

	Newspapers	Radio	Magazines
Advertising adds to interest	73%	44%	64%
Takes away from interest	11	38	10
Makes no difference	11	12	12
No opinion	5	6	14

The question concerning newspapers was put to readers of all types of papers, daily or weekly, regardless of whether they were subscribers.

A similar survey conducted in Canada by the Canadian Institute of Public Opinion showed the following results:

	Newspapers	Radio	Magazines
Advertising adds to interest	64%	28%	54%
Takes away from interest	9	32	13
Makes no difference	22	15	20
Undecided	5	5	13

Want to Laugh All Week or 'Vant to Be Alone? You Gotta Make Your Choice April Fools' Day

By Dorothea Andrews
Post Reporter

Come April 1 you've got a choice.

You can either celebrate National Laugh Week or National Leave-Us-Alone Week. Both run from April 1 to 8.

You may make up your mind about which you druther do between March 6-11 when National Smile Week comes up.

Me, I'll take National Food Health Week, which comes between May 20-27, as does National Fishermen's Week, Poppy Week, and assorted days.

The conglomeration of days and weeks come to you courtesy the U. S. Department of Commerce, which hastens to add that observances of same are not necessarily suggested by the sponsor.

Just Trying to Help Business

All the Office of Domestic Commerce is trying to do, explains Director H. B. McCoy, is help "business in coordinating advertising and other promotional plans" with special events.

Of which 1950 is just chock-full.

Right now, for instance, we are in National: Large-Size Week, Idaho Potato and Onion Week, Jaycee Week, Printing Week, Church and Economic Life Week and Thrift Week.

Which is about par for the course. Take any week this year and you'll find five or six weeks within it being pulled out for view.

Like National Hot Tea Week, which comes up, of all months, in this one, from January 23-29. And there's National Sweater Week, for some people, from October 25-30.

Animals, Humans Divide Honors

The animals are remembered with the traditional Be-Kind-To week, from May 7-13, with Save-the-Horse Week from October 14-21; National Cat Week, from November 5-11; and National Fur-Care Week, from January 26-February 2.

Symbolically enough, National Baseball Week runs from April 22-29, and Grandmother's Day comes around on October 8, which sounds like a fine bright day for a World Series contest.

The expectant father gets a big day this year, on June 17, to be followed on June 18 by Father's Day.

The frugal housewife gets a week, too: National Sew-and-Save Week, from February 18-25 (if it could but be confined to that!).

There are also anachronisms in all this day and weeking. Like St. Patrick's Day, which (all about snakes, originally) falls within National Wildlife Restoration Week, which certainly includes snakes—or does it?

Neatest fit is National Coin Week, which runs right through National Donut Week in April.

National Honey-for-Breakfast Week comes in April, National Pickle Week comes in May and National Ice Cream Fiesta comes in June.

The Lessons-in-Truth Week, in September, isn't anywhere near George Washington's Birthday.

The day we're looking forward to, though, comes next October 21.

That's the Sweetest Day of the Year. Isn't That Nice?

Bus Workers Reply To AB&W Brief

A renewed effort by union employes of the A. B. & W. Bus Co. to stop the State of Virginia from operating the firm's lines between Virginia and the District will be made in a brief due for filing today the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The State has been operating the bus lines under a Virginia law since last July 21, deadline set for a strike by the union, Local 1131, Association of Street Railway and Motor Coach Employes.

John R. Foley, attorney for the union, said the brief will contend "that Virginia State law prohibits strikes in the transportation industry and the national policy doesn't and that a bus line operating interstate should conform to the national policy."

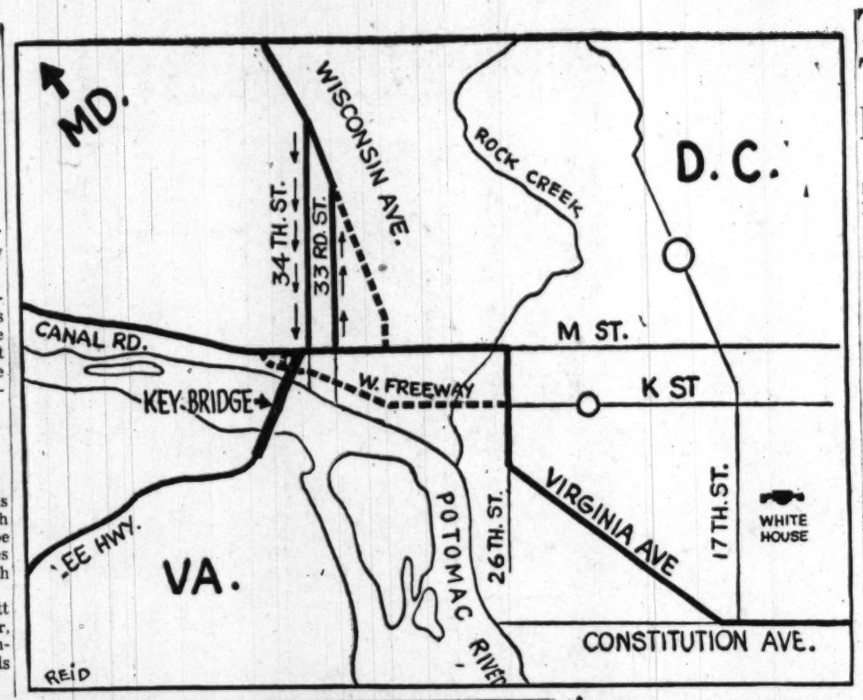
"The contention of the state that the state public interest should be controlling cannot be sustained because of the supervening national interest," Foley said the brief would maintain.

The brief is in answer to motions filed by the state and the bus company seeking dismissal of the union's previous complaint that the state has no right to operate the lines that run between Virginia and the District.

50-Year Transit Clerk To Be Honored Today

George W. Pettitt, 71, who has completed 50 years' service with the Capitol Transit Co., will be honored today by fellow employes at the Navy Yard Division, 8th and M sts. se.

A depot clerk since 1914, Pettitt joined the company's predecessor, the Capital Traction Co., as a conductor in 1900. He lives with his wife at 1327 Potomac ave. se.



GEORGETOWN CHANGE—Heavy black lines indicate present truck routes through Washington to and from Key Bridge. Broken lines show how they will be changed to relieve congestion on M st. by using Whitehurst Freeway. Arrows show how trucks have been using 34th and 33d sts.

Trucks Routed Through City On Freeway

Traffic rule changes switching through trucks from M st. nw., to the Whitehurst Freeway and from 33d and 34th sts. nw. to Wisconsin ave. were announced yesterday.

Effective February 1:

1. Trucks traveling between Key or Chain bridges and Routes 1 or 50 to the North will follow the Freeway to 26th st. nw., instead of traveling on M st. to 26th st. They will then follow the same route now used.

2. Trucks entering the city over Key Bridge and leaving on Route 240 to the North will go east on M st. and north on Wisconsin ave. instead of 33d st. Trucks traveling south on Route 240 to Key Bridge will follow Wisconsin ave. to M st. instead of using 34th st.

District officials said the changes were made to relieve conditions on M st., which is still congested despite opening of the Freeway, and to remove the truck routes from the residential neighborhoods on 33d and 34th sts.

In a related action yesterday, the District Public Utilities Commission permitted Virginia Stage Lines, Inc., to route its buses over the Freeway.

Parties Agree To Injunction In Clark Case

Judge Richmond B. Keech of District Court yesterday issued a preliminary injunction maintaining the status quo in the landlord-tenant controversy between Mrs. Shannon Clark and Edward B. Dewey, one of her tenants.

Mrs. Clark, owner of 2500 Massachusetts ave. nw., and the wife of Rear Adm. Joseph J. (Jocko) Clark, got an eviction order against Dewey, but the order is stayed pending action of the United States Court of Appeals.

Dewey then brought court action, charging that Mrs. Clark and her agents have interfered with him and his guests.

The injunction, signed with consent of both parties, contains the following terms:

Mrs. Clark must not forcibly enter Clark's apartment or interfere with the tenants there or their guests and servants.

Dewey is restrained from allowing guests to be disorderly or noisy or to have them at unreasonable hours. He must not interfere with Mrs. Clark or her agents in their lawful duties.

Bus Operator Cleared of Traffic Death Charges

Negligent homicide charges against Warren J. Harrison, a bus driver, yesterday were nolle-prossed by the United States Attorney's office for insufficient evidence.

The charges grew out of the traffic death last August 30 of John . Watson, 67, of 945 K st. nw., who was hit by the bus operated by Harrison at 11th and K sts. nw.

Assistant United States Attorney J. Warren Wilson said yesterday that witnesses uncovered since the coroner's inquest threw a different light on the case. Harrison's address was given as 5425 N 22nd rd. Arlington.

Drunk Driving Sentence Suspended for Father

An Arlington man, given a total 13-month jail sentence on charges of driving while drunk and hit and run, received a suspended sentence yesterday when his lawyer explained he is the father of six children.

The defendent, Joseph C. Blue, 1272 S. 28th st., Arlington pleaded guilty to both charges, which involved about $120 property damage to two cars.

Traffic Light Requested

Arlington Police Chief Harry Woodyard said yesterday he has recommended installation of a traffic light on Lee blvd. at N. Fillmore st.

Trujillo Offers To Junk Arms For Security

Ciudad Trujillo, Dominican Republic, Jan. 19 (U.P.).—President Rafael Leonidas Trujillo today said he was ready to junk a two-year 20-million-dollar armament program "if we receive assurances we will not be attacked."

Trujillo's military preparations began two years ago after an invasion force, organized on Cuban soil, was turned back by the Cuban navy.

Trujillo today disclaimed territorial designs against Haiti or any other country.

The Dominican armament program followed in December by congressional action giving Trujillo power to declare war on any country sheltering a potential invasion force against the Dominican Republic.

Warlike moves by this country now are under investigation by the Organization of American States on a complaint by Haiti that they were contrary to the Inter-American Mutual Defense Pact, linking all nations of the Americas.

Trujillo said his country was threatened with attack from Cuba, Guatemala and Haiti.

Surinam to Get Local Autonomy From Dutch Today

Paramaribo, Surinam, Jan. 19 (AP). Surinam gets the right to handle her domestic affairs under a new constitution to be promulgated Friday.

The Netherlands will continue to administer foreign relations and defense of this Dutch colony of 207,000 persons on the north coast of South America between British and French Guiana.

The constitution is referred to as an "interim order," with the expectation all the Netherlands' West Indies will be incorporated later into one state under the Dutch crown. The setup would be similar to that of the new United States of Indonesia.

Electrician Builds Own TV Color Converter for 30 Cents

Roselle, N. J., Jan. 19 (U.P.).—A 27-year-old electrician who rigged for himself a color television receiver for 30 cents was amazed today to learn he is the only person who has done it.

Equally amazed was the Columbia Broadcasting System which is engaged in the current race to produce color television acceptable to the Federal Communications Commission.

Forrest Killy, a bachelor living here with his sister's family, is receiving the experimental color telecasts which WCBS-TV in New York thought it was transmitting only for FCC officials in Washington with special receivers.

Killy read in radio magazines that the network was sending television in color during morning hours.

He rummaged among spare parts in the house and came up with an old phonograph motor. He bought 30 cents worth of cellophane in three colors—red, green and blue. He stretched the cellophane in pie-like sections on a disc 12 inches in diameter.

Then Killy mounted the contraption on a plywood stand in front of his table-model television set, which picks up only black and white broadcasts. He geared the phonograph motor to spin the wheel, blending the vari-colored cellophane sections into a colorful blur.

Looking through the spinning, 12-inch wheel at the screen during the experimental color programs, Killy enjoys fine, full-color television.

"We almost dropped dead when his sister wrote us about it," a CBS official said today.

Mrs. William Schaible, his sister, said neither she nor Killy knew they were doing anything unusual. But Mrs. Schaible wrote CBS in New York to ask how the telecasts were being transmitted so her brother could better synchronize the speed of his cellophane wheel.

Network officials dispatched a team of experts to this city last night and they came back saying, "It's true."

"We certainly were surprised at the fuss everybody made," Mrs. Schaible said.

"After all, it was so simple we figured everybody was doing it."

Quentin Reynolds Sues Pegler for $500,000

New York, Jan. 19 (AP).—Quentin Reynolds, foreign correspondent and author, today filed a $500,000 libel suit against Columnist Westbrook Pegler.

Reynolds based his suit on Pegler's column of November 29, which criticized Reynolds' review of a biography of the late Heywood Broun.

Top Heart Experts to Meet Here

Leading surgeons of the heart and its bloodways are scheduled to meet here Saturday in a symposium on "Recent Advances in Cardiovascular Surgery."

The meeting is sponsored by the surgery study section of the National Institutes of Health, Bethesda. It will follow the conclusion of the current three-day National Conference on Cardiovascular Diseases, at the Hotel Mayflower, which ends Friday.

Among papers scheduled for presentation are reports by Drs. Robert E. Gross and Richard E. Sweet, of Boston; Drs. Alfred Blalock and Helen B. Taussig, of Baltimore; Drs. John Y. Templeton and John H. Gibbon, jr., of Philadelphia; Drs. Charles F. McKhann and W. Dean Belnap, of Cleveland, and Dr. Brian Blades, of this city.

Dr. Claude S. Beck, professor of neurosurgery at Western Reserve University, Cleveland, will report on his surgery for vein grafts which bring fresh blood to starving heart muscles.

The current National Conference, attended by some 200 doctors, scientists and community leaders, met in closed sessions yesterday to thresh out their recommendations of ways and means to fight heart disease.

Heart Show Sale Starts

Tickets for the American Heart Association's "VIP Original Amateur Hour" to be staged in Constitution Hall February 2, are now on sale at the Patrick Hayes Concert Bureau, 1108 G st. nw., association officials announced yesterday. The show will be headed by Vice President and Mrs. Alben Barkley.

21 Take Oath As Citizens in Prince Georges

Twenty-five petitioners from foreign lands were admittted to American citizenship in the Prince Georges County Circuit Court at Upper Marlboro yesterday in ceremonies conducted by Judge Charles C. Marbury.

Most of the new citizens were war brides brought to this country by American GI's, six of them coming from the former enemy nations of Italy and Germany. One, an attractive brunette, was admittedly a former member of the Hitler "youth movement" which, she told examiners, she was forced to join for the protection of herself and her family.

Before administering the oath of allegiance, Judge Marbury read the preamble to the Constitution to the applicants, pointing out that it summed up briefly the advantages of the American way of life.

The following were naturalized:

Canada—Mrs. Ruth Loraine Barritt, 5424 55th pl., East Riverdale; Mrs. Clarice Lane, 10 Cheverly Circle, Cheverly; Jacob Bowling, 77, Faulkner; Miss Linda Mary Jackson, 3356 Chillum rd., Mt. Rainier; Mrs. Wilma Barbara Ragan, 5511 Silver Hill rd., Parkland, and Mrs. Helen Marie Stillings Moore, 4612 Lewis ave., Suitland.

Grandfather Guilty In Murder of Girl, 6

Los Angeles, Jan. 19 (U.P.).—A Superior Court jury today found Fred Stroble, 67, guilty of murdering 6-year-old Linda Joyce Glucoft and returned a verdict that will mean death in the gas chamber if he is found sane.

The jury of 10 women and 2 men deliberated four hours before returning its verdict. Stroble, a grandfather, still must be tried on his plea of not guilty by reason of insanity.

If Stroble is found sane in the trial starting Friday, California law requires a sentence of death.

Identity cards for diabetics and others whose ailments sometimes resemble intoxication are being issued by the Washington Metropolitan Police Department.

The cards should serve as protection against police mishandling and to speed medical care to victims of shock and comas found seemingly drunk, it was explained.

On November 13, a 64-year-old diabetic was arrested on a drunkenness charge and jailed for 14 hours before police realized he had been reported missing and ill. Similar instances have occurred here and elsewhere throughout the Nation.

Maj. Robert J. Barrett, superintendent of police, said the identification cards will be issued on the request of a physician or a member of the ill person's family. Duplicate records of those issued will be kept at police headquarters, precinct stations and hospitals for immediate reference, the police chief said.

Even the odor of alcohol on the breath must not deter police from providing prompt medical examination of the card-holders taken into the custody, Barrett ordered. However, if the person is found not to be suffering diabetic coma, insulin shock or other similar condition, he shall be moved to the police precinct and charged.

Barrett said he has already been promised aid by the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, the Naval Medical Center, at Bethesda, and the Army Medical Center here in plans to issue the cards to all eligible patients. They can also be obtained directly at police headquarters, he said.

Court Studies Police Photos in Couple Slaying

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 19 (AP).—Court of Appeals judges studied police photographs today in an effort to reconstruct the sensational Mahlan-Kline murders.

Defense attorneys submitted the pictures at the conclusion of a two-day hearing for Gabby Edwards, the convicted killer.

Maryland's highest court took under advisement Edwards' appeal from a hanging sentence. Its decision probably will be filed next month..

Chief Judge Ogle Marbury asked for photos showing the bodies of John H. Mahlan and Mary C. Kline sprawled in a honeysuckle patch six miles west of Annapolis. They died with bullets in the brain under a full moon the night of September 17, 1948.

What kind of evening gowns will they be wearing this spring and summer? See Sunday's Washington Post for a report on evening fashions for 1950.

Frederick Heart Case Responds to New Drug

A 17-year-old Frederick, Md., youth has shown "marked improvement" from rheumatic heart fever with ACTH treatment at Children's Hospital, it was reported yesterday.

The patient, Jesse C. Ramsburg, jr., has "never looked better" in the nine years that he has suffered from the heart-crippling ailment, his father said yesterday.

Children's Hospital doctors, who supervised the 13-day treatment course with the pitifully rare hormone, were also enthusiastic, but more cautious about its benefits.

The patient, doctors said, is being even more closely watched now that he's been off the drug since January 9. A returning degree of sleeplessness Wednesday night may be a first sign of return of the old symptoms, they said.

The patient's father, postoffice employe at Frederick, said his son had been in and out of Baltimore and Washington hospitals for the past nine years. His latest attack confined him to bed for more than a month before his admittance to Children's on December 21.

Seven days later, the injections of ACTH (adrenocorticotrophic hormones) were begun, the doctors said. Within three days, they reported, the patient showed marked improvement. Where before he had suffered weakness and breathlessness he gained strength, weight, easy breathing and a returning vitality.

Now he walks about his room, and has to be held in check lest he overdo himself in his enthusiasm. Laboratory analytical tests show the same marked improvements of body function.

Sales Tax Urged By Fairfax Group

Fairfax County School Board last night urged passage of a Virginia sales tax—with proceeds in the county to help pay for the proposed 12-million-dollar school building program.

The board also predicted an increase of nearly 4500 pupils by 1951 over the present 13,968 students now enrolled in the county schools. It reaffirmed its intention to carry out the building program drawn up last fall.

Last year, when an effort was made to call a special session of the Virginia Legislature, the board endorsed a sales tax to help meet the cost of increasing school needs. Last night's action was a reaffirmation of this stand.

The board's opinion was that a sales tax would go far toward paying the cost of the proposed $10,500,000 bond issue. A petition aimed at putting the bond issue to a vote in a county-wide referendum is being circulated with the board's backing by the Fairfax County School Emergency Association.

The board also noted that many county residents were unaware that an additional $1,500,000 is expected to be tacked on the bond issue from state literary loans and grants. This would bring the school construction program to 12 million dollars.

Should more than $1,500,000 be made available to the county school system as a result of Governor Battle's 45 million dollar State-wide school program, the board indicated the over-all bond issue floated would be reduced by such amount.

At present, the board said, 398 classrooms are being used—77 of them temporary and 35 substandard. In order to accommodate the increased enrollment expected by September 1951 and discontinue the temporary and substandard classrooms, an additional 328 rooms will be required.

Undeterred by inclement weather, 13,815 persons yesterday visited the exhibition of treasures from the Vienna Galleries at the National Gallery of Art.

They swelled the total attendance at the show—which closes Sunday night—to 778,785 persons. The show opened November 20.

MONEY FOR THE BANK—At Kann's "Ten to Fifty Year Club" banquet last night in the Mayflower Hotel, Miss Belle Goldman receives a $1000 check in recognition of her 50 years' service with the department store. B. B. Burgunder, vice president of Kanns, makes the presentation, witnessed by Lyle Mann, club president, and Sol Kann (right), president of Kann's. Six new members were welcomed into the organization

Six new members were welcomed into Kann's "Ten to Fifty Year Club" at its fourth annual banquet at the Mayflower Hotel last night.

The new members, each of whom received a gold pin for having completed 10 years' service with the store, are Mrs. Neda Basset, Mrs. Adelle Bauer, Claudis Cornell, Howard Hilton, Mrs. Lollie Lusby and Mrs. Glenna Schultz.

A $1000 check was presented to Miss Belle Goldman in recognition of her 50 years' service with Kann's.

Diamond pins went to 13 club members who have been with the store for 30 years, gold wrist watches to 12 members who have chalked up 25 years' service, and pins to 13 members with 20 years' service and 18 members with 15 years' service.

The awards were made by Sol Kann, president of the firm, and B. B. Burgunder, vice president. The presentations were followed by entertainment and dancing.

Government Plan by Clarke Hit in Fairfax

The past president of the Federation of Fairfax County Citizens Associations last night labeled Virginia State Senator Andrew Clarke's proposed county government legislation as "the most amateurish attempt at reorganization of government that can be imagined."

"We would have no management at all in Fairfax County if it is passed," Harold Ward, chairman of the federation's governmental affairs committee, also told the federation meeting at the Annandale School.

Ward said the senator's bill calls for: (1) The modified commission plan which would make the present six members of Fairfax County board of supervisors into commissioners; and (2) the county manager plan which "would actually give the manager no power—he would act only as told by the board of supervisors."

"Clarke's bill," Ward continued, "would also exclude any possibility of Fairfax County having an elected school board. The bill provides that no officers should be elected except the board of supervisors, the sheriff, the clerk of the court, the city attorney, commissioner of revenue, treasurer and Commonwealth attorney."

This provision Ward termed "a serious joker."

Previously the federation had initiated a drive for a county manager type of government for Fairfax County which provides for a county manager as administrator; and a board of supervisors as a policy-making group.

Dr. Weitzell Again Heads North Ridge Citizens Group

Dr Everett C. Weitzell, program analyst with the Rural Electrification Administration, last night was reelected president of the North Ridge Citizens Association of Alexandria.

Others elected at the George Mason School were R. H. Bussard, first vice president; Charles L. Nast, second vice president; Stuart Morrison, treasurer; Miss Isabella Diamond, recording secretary; Marvin Cultice, corresponding secretary, and Marvin F. Hall, sergeant at arms.

The group heard an illustrated lecture on Potomac River pollution given by Louis Warrick, public health representative on the Potomac Interstate River Commission.

Veto of Corning's Choice Called Threat

tion of school superintendents declared that the board's action in overruling the superintendent was "of concern to every school system in the country."

"It is important to the children of every community that professional training and experience shall be the sole basis of recommendation by the superintendent and appointment by the board of education. When this safeguard is undermined, the quality of teaching suffers accordingly."

In turning down the superintendent's recommendation of Miss McAuliffe, board members paid tribute to her record as a teacher and assistant principal of Paul Junior High School, 8th and Ogelthorpe sts., nw.

Board President C. Melvin Sharpe said that a majority of members favored another candidate.

Adelbert W. Lee, chairman of the board's personnel committee, yesterday said that he felt the new Sousa Junior High School needs a principal "familiar with conditions peculiar to the southeast section" where the new school is located.

John Koontz, assistant principal of Kramer Junior High School, also in the southeast, is a candidate for the post.

Lee declared that the superintendent waited until "the last minute" before recommending any candidate for the principalship. The school will be ready for occupancy in a month and classes that will move to the new building will be organized at Kramer February 1.

"I am greatly disturbed that the appointment was not made months ago," Lee said. "If it had, we might have avoided all of this."

The statement from the Association of School Administrators said the board's action "appears to be another instance of the controlling majority of the board attempting to usurp the authority of one of the ablest school superintendents in America.

"During more than a century of experience, the Board of Education has come to be the policy-making body and the superintendent its administrative officer entitled to execute its policies without interference.

"By disregarding this principle, some members of the Washington board raise the question as to whether they are either ignorant or ruled by personal ambition."

The statement said that with all the "major problems which the Strayer survey revealed, it is a pity that a few members can find nothing better to do than meddle with administrative matters."

The reference was to the survey of local schools concluded nearly a year ago by Dr. George D. Strayer of Columbia University.

Miss McAuliffe, center of the growing storm, has been a teacher and assistant principal in District schools for 25 years.

She taught for nine years in the elementary schools and for 10 years in the junior high field before she was appointed assistant principal of Paul Junior High in 1943.

A native of the District and a graduate of local schools, she has studied at George Washington, Columbia, Maryland and Catholic Universities.

In submitting her appointment, Dr. Corning said he indorsed her "not only for her professional training and experience, but also for strong personal attributes of loyalty, common sense, fairness and success in dealing with students, teachers, fellow officers and parents."

Miss McAuliffe said yesterday that she was not discouraged by the board's refusal to approve her appointment. She said she had received many messages of confidence from her colleagues.

Cold Eases Floods, Ice Storm Arrives

Chicago, Jan. 19 (U.P.)—Major floods were reported abating in the stricken Midwest today, but a freak ice storm hit the Pacific Northwest and the Red Cross declared parts of Oregon and Washington a disaster area.

Snow, rain and sleet lashed northwestern Oregon and southwestern Washington, tearing down power lines and disrupting traffic.

Astoria, Oreg., a town of 20,000, was isolated from communication with the outside world by broken power lines. Portland streets were heaped in ice and 75 persons were stranded in snowdrifts on the Columbia River highway east of Portland.

The Red Cross moved in to help persons suffering in the storm.

Flood waters, meanwhile, began to abate in the major areas of the flood basin, but the number of refugees in six cities climbed above 22,000.

A major threat on the Mississippi River appeared to be abating in southeastern Missouri, where some 10,000 lowlanders had straggled to higher ground.

5 Bullet Wounds

4th Witness Puts Pritchett At Fatal Scene

The prosecution continued yesterday to present witnesses in District Court who say they saw first-degree murder defendant Fred L. Pritchett, 38, at the scene of the fatal shooting of Clyde L. King.

Pritchett, a mechanic, is accused of shooting five bullets into King, while the latter was engineering a switch locomotive July 10 in the Eckington yards of the B&O railroad here.

Joseph W. Newman, a brakeman, of 641 I st. ne., became the fourth witness to testify Pritchett left the locomotive area soon after the shooting.

Newman said that when King's locomotive stopped suddenly, Newman saw Pritchett and said, "Are you on the ground?" (In railroad parlance this means, is your locomotive derailed? Newman explained.)

Newman said Pritchett seemed startled and replied, "Huh?"

Then, Pritchett walked away, the witness said.

Judge Commits Man as Sex Psycopath

Edward Hines Mathews, 24, of 106 Park rd., Takoma Park, yesterday was ordered committed to St. Elizabeths Hospital as a sex psychopath by Municipal Judge Milton S. Kronheim, jr.

Mathews is the 12th person sent to the institution by a Municipal Court judge since the 1948 passage of the Miller sex psychopath law.

The man was arrested last December 31 after he had indecently exposed himself before a 7-year-old girl in a Washington movie house.

Early last year Matthews was sentenced to $250 or 180 days on a similar charge.

Yesterday Assistant Corporation Counsel Clark King informed the court Mathews admitted having an irresistible impulse to expose himself to girls.

Safecrackers Get $600 in Union Funds

Safecrackers netted about $600 in union funds early yesterday when they jimmied open a 1000-pound safe in the first-floor office of Local 555, Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen, 433 Massachusetts ave. nw.

M. G. Curtis, union secretary, told police he found the office in a shambles and the safe cracked open about 830 a. m.

Two metal cash boxes which contained the money were found in a back room. Checks and money orders were strewn about the room. But account books and records, also in the boxes, were found in tact.

Police theorized that the safecrackers used a crowbar to get into the safe. They said the thieves entered through a rear window.

Here Is Another Time The Anti-Trust Lawyers Were Wrong!

Ever since the anti-trust lawyers filed their suit to put A&P out of business, they have been making, in the newspapers and over the radio, various "allegations" about how they think this company does business.

Please remember that "allegations" are charges that have not been proved.

In this case they will be disproved.

There have been times in the past when the anti-trust lawyers made very damaging "allegations" about this company that the courts eventually decided were utterly without foundation.

In our last advertisement we told you about the time the anti-trust lawyers charged that A&P, two other food chains and two labor unions conspired to fix the price of bread in Washington, D. C.

And yet, when this case came to trial, it was revealed that the defendants were actually selling bread cheaper than most other stores in Washington, and that there was absolutely no evidence that they had ever engaged in any such "alleged" conspiracy.

That was the time Federal Judge T. Alan Goldsborough instructed the jury to bring in a verdict of "not guilty."

It was the time he said to the anti-trust lawyers:

"If you were to show this record to any experienced trial lawyer in the world, he would tell you that there was not any evidence at all.

"Honestly, I have never in my over forty years' experience seen tried a case that was as absolutely devoid of evidence as this. That is the honest truth. I have never seen one like it."

But this was not the only time that the anti-trust lawyers made such serious "allegations" against A&P which were false.

Again, and still again, they brought cases against A&P and suffered defeat.

As we have said, we think you are entitled to know about these other cases. And now, we are going to tell you about the second time the anti-trust lawyers were wrong.

The North Carolina Potato Case

In December, 1941, the anti-trust lawyers brought a criminal suit in Wilson, North Carolina.

They charged that A&P's fresh fruit and vegetable buying subsidiary, and other good American citizens, had conspired to fix and depress prices paid farmers for potatoes in North Carolina, Virginia and Maryland.

Can anyone imagine any charge calculated to be more damaging to a retail grocery business that must rely on farmers, day after day, for the food we distribute to our customers?

In this case the anti-trust lawyers gave a story to the newspapers, telling millions of farmers that we were the kind of people who would force their prices down, deprive them of a decent income, and lower their families' living standard.

These charges were false.

They made these charges despite the fact that it has always been A&P's policy to pay our farm suppliers fair market prices for all produce; to aid agriculture through better distribution of its products; to narrow the spread between farm and retail prices; and to help farmers build better markets for their products.

That is why many thousands of farmers all over the country are now coming to our support.

When the case finally came to trial, the anti-trust lawyers put on as their first witness a potato expert of the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

This expert, who was the anti-trust lawyers' own witness, testified that contrary to the anti-trust lawyers' "allegations," the defendants made every effort to help the Department of Agriculture in its efforts to aid the potato farmer in better marketing of his products and in getting a better price for his products.

When the anti-trust lawyers had put in their evidence and argued their case, Federal Judge C. C. Wyche directed the jury to bring in a verdict of "not guilty."

Judge Wyche said to the anti-trust lawyers:

"I have studied this case from the very outset. In my opinion there is no testimony produced from which it can reasonably be inferred that the defendants entered into a combination to depress or lower the price of potatoes.

"I might say that I never tried a case in my life where a greater effort, more work, more investigation had been done, combing almost with a fine-tooth comb to gather evidence, as was done in this case.

"But, as was said a long time ago, you can't make brick without straw, and you can't make a case without facts."

So, here was a case in which the anti-trust lawyers made seriously damaging charges against A&P in which the Judge decided that there were no facts to support those charges.

That is why we say the anti-trust lawyers can be wrong and have been wrong.

That is why we say that they are wrong again, just as they were wrong in the Washington bread case and the North Carolina potato case.

We are going to show the American people that the suit to destroy A&P is really a suit against efficiency and against real competition.

The real question involved in this suit is whether businessmen are going to be encouraged to do a better and more efficient job; or whether we are going to let the anti-trust lawyers in Washington blow the whistle on anybody who gets big by giving the people more for their money.

No one can make us believe that it is a crime to try to sell the best quality food at the lowest possible price.

Crime Schools

Stories of young toughs intimidating students at the Banneker Junior High School are shocking. Although the significance may be exaggerated, the fact that would-be mobsters have preyed upon and threatened younger children here and at other Negro schools is a serious reflection on the work of probation authorities. The real danger lies in the potential breeding ground for criminals if older youths are permitted to coerce younger boys into robbing and stealing under threat of physical violence—and there are many reports that this has happened.

One difficulty is the impossibility under District law of preventing loitering at schools. By no means all the idle older boys hanging around schools are lawbreakers, but in any case their presence is an unhealthy influence on younger children. Basically, however, the need is for more police protection, both as a preventive measure and to catch offenders. Here a conflict of jurisdiction arises; after school hours the playground at Banneker is a recreation area under control of the Park Police. Where assistance has been given by the Metropolitan Police it usually has been effective in holding down depredations, but there obviously has not been enough such assistance.

The trouble at Banneker suggests not only that there ought to be an arrangement to provide continuous protection, but also that the prevention of juvenile delinquency in the Negro community generally ought to be high on the police priority list. More than that it suggests that the city's youth organizations still have a big job to do.

Arming The Arabs

As long as there is no formal peace between Israel and her Arab neighbors, Britain's resumption of arms shipments to countries in treaty relations with her, Egypt, Trans-Jordan, and Iraq, is highly questionable. It is quite true, as Secretary Acheson says, in defending the traffic, that the Middle East area is of "great importance to the West." It would have been more exact to say that what is important is a peaceful and progressive Middle East. Is either peace or progress to be gained by resuming arms shipments? We doubt it. What will now happen is that Israel, anxious to settle down to peaceful pursuits, will have to maintain and strengthen its military establishment. The trouble here is that Israel has access to the arsenals neither of Britain nor America.

Nor is the traffic helpful in securing the Arab states against Russian aggression. The condition of the armament of the Middle East countries would not be the slightest bar to the Russians. What will secure these countries against the only aggression that appears likely, namely, internal upsets, is a concerted effort to join in plans for regional rehabilitation. In this connection the Clapp report, by citing some pilot projects, affords a frame of reference, but the import of arms will divert attention from this enterprise, maintain the current backwardness, and put a premium on coups d'etat by ambitious generals. The foolishness of putting arms in the hands of the politically inmature has been demonstrated in this hemisphere, but the lesson is never learned.

Rubber On The Bounce

There can be no argument over the President's determination to keep the country adequately supplied with synthetic rubber. The United States had too close a squeak during the war, when the sources of natural rubber were shut off, to allow of any question about the need to keep synthetic production facilities in readiness. Where there is room for a good deal of argument is in the nature of the far-reaching governmental controls over production and use of rubber provided for in the program drawn up by John R. Steelman and submitted to Congress by Mr. Truman.

The possibility is raised in the report that though many of the Government's plants now producing synthetic rubber can readily be sold to private industry with a national defense clause, one type of synthetic (GR-S) is not yet a sufficiently good competitor with natural rubber to assure that it will be kept in production. Accordingly the report asks for presidential authority to set mandatory levels of production and use of GR-S. It requests similar authority over the more popular butyl rubber (used widely in inner tubes) until there is adequate production by private industry.

Several objections to this procedure are manifest. First of all, it would be impossible to set levels of production and use of GR-S without some protection against monopoly and price-gouging. Inevitably this would mean price controls. Secondly, a governmentally dominated synthetic rubber industry would play hob with international trade; natural rubber is the largest single export of the British Empire. The British would have no legitimate objection to the proposal if private industry itself were to determine the ratio between natural rubber imports and synthetic production. But they would have considerable reason to complain if a governmentally dictated synthetic program were to squeeze out natural rubber. Finally, the growing use of synthetic rubber since the war gives no reason to believe that manufacturers would abandon it for natural rubber, and this holds for GR-S as well as butyl. Synthetic rubber is in effect a price stabilizer as respects natural rubber. No company is going to give up synthetic for a mere temporary price advantage in natural rubber.

The President's request, it seems to us, takes too little cognizance of American technical advancement. At the beginning of World War II the country did not know how to make synthetic rubber; now it does. Even if all facilities were lost, they could be reconstructed in a relatively short time. All this, in our opinion, is strong argument against a panic program. Instead of imposing new controls, the most sensible policy would be for the Government to get out of the synthetic rubber business through sale of as many plants as possible. What facilities were not taken over by private industry could always be kept in stand-by condition against an emergency.

Five Percent

The interim report of Senator Hoey's subcommittee, which has been investigating the activities in Washington of brokers in official influence—the "5-percenters," as they are popularly called—is a surprisingly thoughtful and illuminating document. For one thing, the authors of the report recognize that the evil with which they have been attempting to grapple is complex rather than simple, and that it cannot be wholly eradicated. Where the power of decision in matters involving profit is vested in officials, as indeed it must be in the case of Government contracts, the persons seeking such contracts will make efforts by one means or another to influence the decisions. The problem, therefore, is to distinguish between proper and improper means.

For another thing, the subcommittee recognizes that where purchasing by the Government is on such a tremendous scale as at present, and where the specifications for purchases are of such highly specialized character, the middleman, or manufacturer's agent, plays both an important and a necessary part. If it is proper for large industrial manufacturing corporations to maintain large Washington offices for the sole purpose of keeping in touch with the Government's purchasing activities, it is certainly proper for smaller manufacturers to employ agents to do the same.

Hence the subcommittee essays to set forth a series of tests whereby manufacturers' agents who operate upon an ethical basis, sanctioned by business custom, can be distinguished from those whose operations are contrary to commercial ethics and to the public interest. Generally speaking, says the report, the legitimate agent will have some knowledge of the business he undertakes to represent, the relationship between him and the manufacturer will be on a continuing basis, and the fees or retainers paid to him will be proportionate to the value of his services.

The pure "influence peddler," that is to say, the agent who undertakes to arrange matters between the manufacturer and the purchasing official by virtue of his political acquaintanceships is in another category. He will emphasize not his knowledge of the business or the product but the importance of "knowing the right people" in the Government, and where to apply the proper pressures. He will conduct his business on a social basis—at lunches or dinners or cocktail parties. Finally, his fees will be exorbitant, and will, as a rule, include both a retainer and a contingent fee.

Yet, although it is relatively easy to distinguish between these two classes of activity on the part of middlemen, it is sometimes difficult to decide into which the activities of a given individual may fall. In some cases, says the report, the agent "will engage in some proper activities and those which are improper, so that his activities cannot be labeled as wholly good or wholly bad."

And of course the evil does not lie wholly with the agents who make use of improper methods. The "influence peddler" could hardly impress even the more naive sort of businessmen, unacquainted with the ways of Washington, without the encouragement or assistance of some Government officials. In other words, the personal influence claimed by the middleman is not infrequently real. The report cites as an example the relationship between James V. Hunt, one of the "5-percenters," and Maj. Gen. Alden H. Waitt, then Chief of the Chemical Warfare Service. The testimony taken by the subcommittee in its hearings last year made it plain "that Hunt succeeded in influencing General Waitt to give special and unusual consideration to his client because he felt that Hunt could help him in the furtherance of his military career." Instances were found in which Government officials had actually recommended Mr. Hunt to persons seeking business arrangements with the Government to represent them.

However, the report is obliged to draw still another distinction between 5-percenters of the character of Mr. Hunt, who combine business and intrigue, and the "outright fixer," such as Mr. John Maragon, now under indictment for perjury. The fixer "keeps no regular books or records," surrounds himself with a coterie which conducts its business from "hotel lobbies, cocktail lounges, and pay phones, deliberately creating the impression that the only way to deal with the Government is the devious way." But again, as the report suggests in discussing the relationship between Maragon and Major General Vaughan, the "fixer" could not succeed without the assistance or at any rate the toleration of important officials.

The report also makes it clear why it is necessary to curb and control such activities. The great evil of the 5-percenters and the fixers lies less in what they have actually accomplished for those who have engaged them than in the moral contagion they spread. It is another example of how easily the good manners of reasonably well-intentioned men may be corrupted by evil communication.

Denham To The Rescue

The attempt of Robert Denham, general counsel of the NLRB, to enjoin continuance of the three-day work week in the coal mines by invoking the unfair labor practices provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act is a play to the gallery that will probably disappoint the spectators. It is true that an injunction, if granted, might remain in force a long time, as it would stand until the NLRB had completed its investigation of the charges of unfair labor practices, and the hearings might drag on for many months. However, this temporary injunction would only restrain the miners from strikes and work stoppages designed to support allegedly illegal demands for a union shop, a contract clause permitting them to work only when "willing and able," and limitation of welfare fund payments to UMW members. If the union should subsequently strike to obtain higher wages and improved working conditions, Mr. Denham admits that the injunction would not prevent a walkout to coerce the operators into agreeing to such legal demands.

Furthermore, if Mr. Denham harbored hopes of relieving the pressure on the President to invoke the emergency provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, he is going to be disappointed. For Senator Taft thinks that the act which he sponsored was not intended to give the NLRB "the right to seek a temporary injunction against a strike when there is no contract and when a legitimate difference of opinion exists on wages and welfare fund payments, even if there are other demands which are illegal."

Mr. Denham's intervention is designed ostensibly to force the UMW to bargain in good faith and not use the three-day week as a club to force the operators to enter into an illegal contract. Actually it is an attempt to deal with the critical situation created by part-time work and sporadic strikes. Since only the President is authorized by the Taft-Hartley Act to declare the existence of a national emergency calling for injunctive relief, and he has refused to do so, Mr. Denham's intervention is officious, to say the least. Moreover, for the reasons mentioned, we agree with Senator Taft that the kind of injunction he is asking for would not be an effective means of restoring full production of coal.

Navy Boss

Senator McCarthy's obstructionism in holding up the confirmation of Admiral Sherman as Chief of Naval Operations looks like nothing but a grandstand play. Whether or not Admiral Denfeld had been tendered a commission of reappointment before his ouster last fall has nothing whatever to do with the legality of that ouster. It is a well-established principle, going back to the earliest days of the Republic and buttressed by several Supreme Court decisions, that the President has the inherent power to remove any official of the executive branch unless Congress has specifically stipulated otherwise. There is no such stipulation in the case of the Chief of Naval Operations; moreover, the President's authority over the military forces is clear in his position as Commander in Chief.

Navy Secretary Matthews put his foot in it, to be sure, when he told Congress that Admiral Denfeld's reappointment had not been issued. As we understand the matter, Secretary Matthews was not aware that the President had signed the commission when he made this statement. Why the commission found its way into Admiral Denfeld's hands long before the reappointment was to take effect in December is an interesting story that ought to be made public. But the commission is essentially a side issue; and we believe that the great majority of Congress and the people are behind the President in upholding the supremacy of civilian authority in the Navy.

It is, of course, regrettable that Admiral Denfeld, a fine officer, has seen fit to request retirement—though after he declined a European assignment he appeared to have no other course. The fact is, however, that Admiral Denfeld, for whatever reason, voluntarily chose to go overboard in his criticism of defense policy during the row last fall. There is a difference in this respect between the position of the Chief of Naval Operations, who is principal naval adviser to the President, and that of lesser officers. The Denfeld charges disclosed a gap so wide that it could not have been bridged, and it would have been intolerable to have kept him when he and Mr. Matthews were at loggerheads. The proper insistence on loyalty to policy from the Navy's top officer is by no means the same thing, however, as Secretary Matthews' unfortunate formula, announced the other day, which would penalize Navy officers not for disloyalty, but for independent thinking.

Child Day Care Centers

Rabbi Gerstenfeld's solution to the problem of the care of children of working mothers in the District of Columbia (letter published January 11) is very beautiful from a spiritual point of view but it is neither probable nor practical.

The problem belongs to the Government, not the church. It is the duty of each taxpaying citizen to insist that children in need should be taken care of.

The rabbi mentioned 84,000 children of working mothers in the District. That is a misleading figure. A large percentage of the 84,000 children come from families where the mother is employed because she desires to work, not because it is a necessity. Certainly a mother who employs a maid or governess as the rabbi mentioned does not need financial help.

I am concerned with the children that attend the child day care centers. The parents of these children are of the very low salary bracket. In most cases there is only one parent; in other cases, the combined salaries of the parents are hardly enough to make ends meet.

These parents have great love for their children and try to give them as normal a home life as possible. They pay what they can to the child day care centers.

If they did not have this haven, most of these children would be roaming the streets while their parents are employed. There is a great possibility that as a result, many of them would become juvenile delinquents. Let us help these people who are so willing to help themselves, by making sure there are enough appropriations to expand the child day care program to include all of the children of parents who find it a necessity to be employed.

Liquor Advertising

On January 13, a Philadelphia brewer objected to the presence of several clergymen at a Senate hearing to consider the Langer bill to ban liquor advertising in interstate commerce. He ended his remarks by saying, "We ask that this bill be finally disposed of by interment without benefit of clergy."

I was there because I am a father as well as a clergyman. I am tired of trying to explain to my children why beautiful flowers and men of distinction bound for extinction are used to advertise whisky in magazines which come into our home. Those ads counteract much temperance education.

I was there because the use and abuse of alcoholic beverages, far from being encouraged by lurid advertising, should be discouraged to avoid some of the drunkenness, crime, accidents, murder, broken homes, destitute children in America.

I was there because every day of my ministry I counsel with 5 to 10 wrecks of liquor abuse and advertising who come to me seeking a way out of their hell. If there is to be any advertising, let the truth about alcohol and its effects be printed.

Home Rule In Reverse

A novel argument advanced against the Kefauver home-rule bill and the petition to discharge it from the House District Committee made an appearance last week. Proponents of self-government in the Nation's Capital have long heard the threadbare contention against home rule based on the fear of control by a racial minority. Now comes a Representative from a large Midwestern city and uses the argument in reverse. He derided proponents of home rule for caring little about the Negro, as wanting to take from the Negro "the only agency in the Federal Government completely staffed by colored men."

This Congressman claims to be the defender in the House of Representatives of the civil rights of a substantial number of Negroes in his home city. One of his patronage appointees is a ranking official in the District of Columbia Recorder of Deeds Office.

The Kefauver bill, which would compact 102 separate, overlapping agencies into 12 departments, makes a shift in the Recorder of Deeds Office, a traditional political burying ground for colored vote-getters created by members of Congress who avoid the civil rights issue at home. Thus the enactment of the bill would threaten the job of this Congressman's appointee.

This type of illegitimate action illustrates another reason why the District government should be taken out of the hands of Congress.

Exclusionary Pensions

Newspaper reviews of progress during the past 50 years included articles stating that the average life span of men had been increased by 17 years.

I am one of those persons to whom Mr. Bernard Baruch referred recently when his comments on the effects of public and private retirement programs upon middle-aged candidates for employment were published. One of the effects is that there is a definite disinclination to hire such personnel, irrespective of their occupational ability. The other is that the individual is confronted with a complexity of survival problems at a time when he is thoroughly competent productively.

A reason for this predicament is that current pension plans are predicated on the payment of premiums into retirement funds wherein the rates are based on the beneficiary's age at the time of his engagement. Consequently, the employer puts emphasis on the employment of younger persons. Social Security, with its retirement age set at 65 years, provides no relief for intermediate brackets.

Morally, physically, and economically, this situation is obnoxious and embarrassing to any self-respecting individual whose inadvertent and dubious distinction rests on the social error of having been born too soon.

Higher Utility Rates

The recent decision of the New York Court of Appeals upholding an order of the Public Service Commission of New York which called for a reduction of 21 million dollars annually in the rates of the Consolidated Edison Co. for electricity in New York City should cause various State commissions to moderate their haste to approve a Nation-wide flood of petitions on the part of the utilities for higher rates. While a final decision in this case is to be made by the United States Supreme Court on constitutional grounds, the fact that the most important State utility commission has stood firm in the interests of the public, despite rising costs, gives hope that other commissions will not be less diligent.

Under admitted high cost levels, most regulatory authorities have appeared overanxious to build up the already high financial ratings of utilities to an impregnable position and far less concerned with the consumers' rights to be charged no more than a reasonable rate.

Recent earnings of utilities as shown in the newspapers have been, in the main, far ahead of former years and in some instances the soundness of judgment of the regulatory bodies in approving at rapid speed rate increases based wholly upon the supposition of estimated expansion programs at present high-cost levels is highly questionable. Most expansion contracts are cancelable at the option of the utility. Hence rate increases should only be considered where such expansion programs are certain and beyond reasonable doubt necessary to meet the consumers' needs in the immediate future. Generally, equipment may be obtained within two years, yet utilities are asking clearances on programs extending five or six years ahead and all this before purchase contracts are concluded with the manufacturers.

The result of granting higher rates enables the utilities to borrow funds for expansion at extremely low money rates. The lower the cost of money the greater the profit accruing to the utility within the allowable rate of return on the value of the property used and useful in supplying its particular form of service.

To accentuate petitions for rate increase, utilities now advance a so-called theory of "accelerated depreciation." In some instances they have been successful, always at the expense of the consumer. Accelerated depreciation, in effect, permits the utilities to charge for and deduct from their gross revenues several times the normal and lawful rate of depreciation, as set by State commissions, on property abandoned, or on property no longer used or where the original investment has not brought in revenue to the extent desired.

The depreciation rate is thus increased so that the value remaining in the property can be written off, sometimes within five years, thus representing a 20 percent annual charge for depreciation against the normal average charge of between 2 and 3 percent. Where the property is left in the rate base, on which the allowable rate of return is figured, the consumer pays a double charge, the normal rate plus the accelerated rate. All this bookkeeping reduces the net return to the utility and hence the additional argument for higher rates.

The utilities may now appear before the regulatory bodies armed with an impressive list of proposed additions to plant and equipment and, when permitted to proceed with the capital outlay, plead for accelerated depreciation on the old property. Thus utilities can recoup former capital expenditures at a higher rate while the general public in substance is permitted to underwrite the new plants and equipment through higher rates for service.

If this tenuous doctrine of accelerated depreciation is permitted to gain a firm foothold in the basic theories of public utility regulation, then surely a way has been found to circumvent regulation.

Private Right And FEPC

Society's Interest

SOON THE most controversial of all President Truman's civil rights proposals—to create a fair employment practices commission intended to end discrimination in hiring and firing—will be before Congress. Then we shall hear all the changes rung once again on the debate that is fundamental to our time—the freedom of the individual vs. the encroachment of organized power.

In this space on the first of the year was a discussion of one phase of that debate. It dealt with whether the passerger in a bus or a trolley should be subjected to music and advertising commercials by way of transit radio.

The dissenting opinion of the late Justice Louis D. Brandeis in a famous case involving wire tapping was cited. With the clear and penetrating reason that distinguished his work on the Supreme Court, Brandeis insisted on the individual's right to privacy. To tap a telephone wire, said Brandeis, was just as much an invasion as to steam open a letter.

He argued for "the right to be let alone—the most comprehensive of rights and the most valued by civilized man." Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote his own dissent, agreeing with Brandeis in denouncing wire tapping, a practice that he had called a "dirty business."

THIS discussion, and especially the Brandeis citation, have called forth several editorials in Southern newspapers. An editorial in the Mobile (Ala.) Press attacks FEPC as a most outrageous violation of the right to be let alone:

"This dictatorial agency would turn loose a horde of bureaucrats to pester freedom-loving Americans. The proposed FEPC would be a trouble-making agency of first magnitude. It would interfere in the affairs of employers and employes. The former would lose his right to hire and fire or promote employes as he sees fit. The employe would lose his right to choose his associates.

"FEPC would be created for the primary purpose of destroying the right to be let alone. FEPC bureaucrats, invading the privacy of American citizens, would levy complaints, prosecute, decide the merits of their own case, pass judgment and fix punishment."

That seems to me to be close to the heart of the argument. I have speculated on what Brandeis, who was one of the wisest men I have known, might have said in response to this argument against forbidding by law the right to discriminate in hiring men of one race or another race or one creed or another or none at all.

Obviously, in any society there must be limits on the right of the individual to be let alone. The criminal cannot be let alone to rob and murder. Nor can the psychopath be let alone to prey on the innocent and unsuspecting.

What it comes down to is the inevitable necessity of a compromise between the right of the individual and the right of society as organized for all the complex purposes of modern life. When a relatively fair and reasonable compromise is reached, then we get a stable and well-adjusted society.

IT IS here that one comes up against the problem of long-standing injustice and rank inequality and the seeming absence of fair play. At the bottom of the depression in the early thirties millions of Americans were in possession of the right to be let alone but they were being let alone to go hungry and jobless.

In my opinion, discrimination that penalizes a man because of his color or his creed is unjust. If tradition and inertia are strong enough, such injustice may be tolerated and even accepted over a long period. But in a time of change, when dynamic pressures are applied from every side, such injustices lead to tensions and frustrations that can undermine society. So the choice may be to risk some encroachment on the right of the individual in order to strike a fairer and more decent balance. And that is, of course, always a very great risk.

Opinions are shifting rapidly in these matters, and that is true in the South as well as in the North. A fair-minded Southerner who has done a great deal of thinking about these matters is Representative Brooks Hays of Arkansas. Hays some time ago introduced his own antilynching bill, and he has now put in his own version of FEPC as a substitute for the Administration measure.

The Hays FEPC bill has no provision for punishment. It rests on education and persuasion. To what degree it would cure the existing injustice and thereby make for a saner and better balanced society is a question to be considered in a following column.

Mess Halls

In a January 11 news story you said that, when the Air Forces had just abolished use of the term "mess hall" and had substituted for it "dining hall," that action abolished a term known here since George Washington "picked it up from the British in 1775."

There is evidence that it was used in America even earlier. My colleague, Prof. Elbridge Colby, indicates in his book on Army Talk that it was employed back in 1760 at old Fort Pitt.

Matter Of Fact

By Joseph And Stewart Alsop

Acheson's First Year

IT IS just a year since Dean Gooderham Acheson was sworn in as Secretary of State of the United States. He has already celebrated the anniversary, a little in advance, by routing his enemies on the Formosa issue. It is still in order, however, to try to assess Acheson's performance in what is now perhaps the most important single office in the free world.

The most obvious thing about Acheson is that he is outstanding. He was an outstanding public servant in other times, when the competition was more severe than it is today. On the current Washington scene, as the stature of the surrounding crowd progressively diminishes, Acheson looms larger and ever larger.

But although Dean Acheson has the intellectual power, the strong character and the personal and moral style of a big man, it is also true that his job might overwhelm a giant. No great Foreign Minister of the past, no William Pitt or John Quincy Adams, ever had to deal with human societies grown so insanely complex as to be almost uncontrollable. And even Acheson's immediate predecessors, confronted though they were with a world in ruins, labored in happier circumstances than he.

IT IS NOW very clear, in the first place, that President Truman made up his mind to a general slowdown in defense and foreign policy about the time of his electoral victory in 1948. In part the motive was budgetary. In part, however, the President's campaign-borne dislike of Secretary of Defense James V. Forrestal and Undersecretary of State Robert A. Lovett had also caused him to distrust their methods and councils.

For these reasons, the effort initiated by Forrestal and Lovett, by James F. Byrnes and George C. Marshall and Acheson himself, began to be materially relaxed at the very moment when it was just beginning to succeed. The foreign and defense slowdown confronted Acheson when he entered on his office.

In addition, the former close partnership between the State and Defense Departments was soon replaced, on the top level at least, by the guerilla warfare typified by Louis Johnson's Formosa intervention. The old, close collaboration of bipartisanship in foreign policy soon broke down, so that Acheson faced a hostile Congress. Even within the State Department, he began to lose the help of certain of the most experienced men who advised his predecessors.

All this meant, in turn, that Acheson had to tackle an incredibly uphill job, in a state of almost incredible loneliness and isolation. The American effort might slow down, but the tempo of world events would not slow down. Day after day, month after month, great decisions have crowded in upon Acheson, insistently, clamorously, confusingly. Yet he was and is called upon to make these decisions in solitude, alone, to convince the President of the need for painful and even dangerous action. And alone to point the way for the country. No man on earth could do all this without long hesitation.

NO WONDER, then, that Acheson's first year has been a year in which the world horizon has ominously darkened. There are items on the plus side, of course. European recovery has progressed. The Atlantic Pact has been passed. In the German negotiations in Paris, Acheson showed himself a brilliant diplomat. Here at home, he has just won a victory on Asiatic policy. Yet the items on the plus side are heavily overweighed by the long, grim list on the minus side.

China has been lost, and all Asia has been brought into peril. The Soviet Union has achieved an atomic bomb and has simultaneously begun to surmount almost every major difficulty of the immense Russian rearmament program. In contrast, this country has offered the world the extraordinary spectacle of rapid though unadmitted disarmament, thus far more than negating the Atlantic Pact. The British have suffered a shattering economic crisis and although their situation is looking up for the present, no firm steps have been taken to prevent another British crisis in 12 to 18 months. Finally, the hydrogen bomb has hideously emerged as a new factor in world politics and strategy.

Such is a partial list of Dean Acheson's unfinished business. The least of these problems can lead to the severest setback in the world contest with Soviet imperialism. Most of them, if left unsolved, are quite capable of producing total catastrophe. Yet Acheson must try to solve all of them, all at once, on his own, and despite the complacent general commitment to business as usual.

In truth, Dean Acheson is like the only sober man on a raft of drunken lumberjacks, whose bellowing of "Mademoiselle from Armentieres" obscures the approaching thunder of Niagara Falls. The raft, which also carries all our futures, can yet be saved. But hardly any man in history has been so burdened with such agonizing and desperate responsibility.

Witness Admits Making Bets

no relation to Mrs. King, testified he bet the numbers daily with Acalotti. The day before he had refused to testify on grounds of self-incrimination.

Mrs. King works in a flower shop owned by her son at 1817 Columbia rd. nw.

Mrs. King was identified as a numbers customer of Acalotti on Tuesday by Bernice Franklin, Acalotti's former girl friend who turned state's evidence 11 months ago to become the key witness in United States Attorney George Morris Fay's crackdown on Washington gambling.

Miss Franklin identified Mrs. King and 13 others as persons who regularly called in numbers bets to Acalotti while she was helping him "take numbers and horse bets."

Miss Franklin also identified Acalotti's private telephone list, in which Mrs. King's name and number were listed," and a slip of paper on which appeared the notation "Rose King—245.00" appeared. She said this notation meant that Mrs. King owed Acalotti $245 for "numbers play."

Surprise Witness

Mrs. King appeared as a surprise Government witness late yesterday afternoon in the ninth day of the trial before a jury of seven men and five women, and two male alternates.

After giving her name and telephone numbers she was asked by Hitz:

"Have you called in numbers play to either Till Acalotti or Bernice Franklin during the period from June, 1948, to March, 1949?"

"No, I haven't," she replied, quickly.

In quick succession Hitz then asked Mrs. King if she had ever called Acalotti anything, if she ever sent him money orders, if he ever owed Acalotti anything, if she ever had any business dealings with him and if she could explain how her name and telephone number appeared in Acalotti's private directory.

Attorney Objects

Her answer in each instance was "No."

Ford bounced to his feet after every question Hitz asked, objecting vigorously. He was overruled.

Hitz then asked the witness. "Are you aware that it is possible to get any money orders sent from the Government and produce them here?"

"Yes," she replied.

"Keep this in mind," Hitz said, "and I'll ask you again if you ever sent any money orders to this man?"

She then answered:

"Yes."

"Keep this in mind," Hitz continued, "and I'll ask you again if you ever played the numbers with this man."

Again Says "Yes"

Mrs. King paused, and then replied, "Yes."

"Was the total of your money orders the total of numbers losses by you to Acalotti?"

"No."

"What were the money orders for?"

"For what I owed him."

She also admitted having telephoned Acalotti.

She was not cross-examined.

Earlier five Government witnesses refused to testify on the grounds that their answers might incriminate them.

Four were women found on March 25 in a bungalow at 4310 46th st., Bladensburg, Md., where Lewis and 13 others were arrested in one of eight simultaneous raids under Fay's direction.

They are Mae Cooley, 618 L st. se.; Helen Maimone, Theta Sheppard, 3417 41st ave., Colmar Manor, Md., and Mrs. Helen Danhakl, 1831 2d st. ne.

The fifth reluctant witness admitted he had been a numbers writer before he refused to testify.

He is Harold Robinson, 1315 35th st. nw.

Robinson gave his name and address and then told Hitz, "I'm not giving any more. Legal rights, I guess."

Judge Holtzoff was about to force the witness to answer, when Ford intervened. Hitz then objected to Ford's intervention. Ford said he was speaking "only as a friend of the court," not as counsel for any of the defendants, and urged the judge to warn the witness of his rights against self-incrimination.

Judge Holtzoff warned the witness, and Ford rose "to commend your honor" for so doing.

Robinson told Hitz that "I haven't any business."

"Are you a professional numbers writer, Mr Robinson," Hitz asked.

"I have been, but I never do it any more."

"Isn't it a fact that you stopped yesterday?"

"I could have. I'm not on trial, am I? I'm not going to answer any more," he replied.

The telephone directory lists Robinson's telephone number as Hobart 0347.

Deputy Marshal Edward J. Geraci testified Wednesday that during the raid on March 25 he accepted a numbers bet over the telephone at Lewis' headquarters from a person who gave his telephone number as Hobart 0347.

Others who testified yesterday were Deputy Marshals Francis F. McCathran and George Deakyne; Downey Rice and Dale Adams, both special consultants to Fay's office, and James F. Lennon, assistant manager of the 9th and East Capitol sts. branch of the City Bank.

Adams identified three numbers slips taken from small packages of similar slips marked "31." The Government contends that Billeci was a "tentacle" in the Lewis organization and that he had the account number "31."

Lewis and the United Mine Workers.

By declaring a "national emergency" and invoking the Taft-Hartley Management-Labor Relations Act, the President could put the miners back on a full-production basis for 80 days.

The President also said yesterday that he had nothing whatever to do with the injunction suit filed against Lewis and the UMW by an executive arm of the government. The action was taken Wednesday by Robert N. Denham, general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, in a move to stop Lewis from allegedly coercing the operators into accepting an illegal contract.

Denham took the action after investigating charges of unfair practices leveled at Lewis by five operator groups. Denham had a right to take such steps as the law provides, Mr. Truman said.

The President said that Denham told the White House what was going on and all the White House did was to listen. Mr. Truman observed that it was not his business to bless or unbless Denham's activities.

Strikers Urged to Return

In the mine fields, meanwhile, UMW leaders were exhorting some 90,000 "wildcat" strikers to return to their pits next Monday and continue to work on the three-day work week imposed by John L. Lewis. There were indications that the strikers wanted more than a "suggestion" from Lewis that they go back. They want direct orders. Some want to stay out altogether until the union wins a new "improved" contract from the operators.

At Brownsville, Pa., yesterday, 3000 miners met, argued and shoved each other around before agreeing on a resolution to return to work on getting direct word to do so from Lewis. A UMW official was roughed up.

Duquesne Light Co., which earlier in the week announced it would have to cut off power supply from 300 big industrial concerns in the Pittsburgh area beginning today in order to save dwindled supplies of coal for homes and hospitals, backed away from its threat yesterday.

The utility company said yesterday that it would continue turning out power for its customers at least until some time next week. A union official charged that the Duquesne Power Co. was not in any danger of running out of coal, but was merely adding to the pressure to get Mr. Truman to use the Taft-Hartley Act.

Dynamiters destroyed two giant power shovels, valued at $100,000, in a nonunion mine at Fayette County, Pa. A 30-year-old nonunion miner was beaten unconscious near Morgantown, W. Va.

In Cleveland, Mayor Thomas A. Burke declared a coal emergency and reported the city has only a few days' supply of retail coal on hand.

marked "Federal Reserve Bank of Boston" were picked up in Massachusetts and Rhode Island. One, found at Providence, R. I., was ruled out immediately as not of the type stolen. The other two were under investigation.

Massachusetts Attorney General Francis E. Kelly called a coordinating conference for Friday of all investigating agencies, including local, State and Federal authorities.

Police began a search of the entire New England shoreline on the theory the bandits might have taken to the sea to elude capture after the robbery. Brink's garage is on the waterfront.

Detectives in Miami flagged down the streamliner Miamian as it entered the northeast 29th st. yards and arrested Arthur Langano, 45, of Englewood, N. J.

Boston Police Captain John D. Ahearn said Langano was wanted for questioning in connection with the holdup.

Miami Detective J. H. Holland said he found $1762 in cash on Langano's person. Langano said he was a salesman on vacation. The detective said Langano admitted serving five years of a 10-year sentence for armed robbery in New Jersey.

Still considered possible clews were two money bags found in Massachusetts streets five miles apart—one in Saugus and the other in South Peabody. The bag found in Saugus was wrapped in a Boston newspaper printed on the day of the holdup. It was pointed out money bags are not difficult to obtain in honest commerce.

Peabody police said they were holding the bag found in that city for Boston authorities. Both bags carried serial numbers, but Reserve Bank officials described these as requisition order numbers of which no record is kept. For that reason, they said, there is no way to tell if they were stolen.

Secretary of State a year. Finally, a wide-open break came when Byrnes, once a powerful New Dealer, opened fire last June on the "welfare state" and expressed fear that the United States might be "going down the road to statism."

President Truman, at yesterday's news conference, had spoken in a markedly different tone when asked about Senator Scott Lucas, who comes up for reelection in Illinois this fall.

He said that, of course, he wanted Lucas to come back to the Senate, where he is majority leader; and he added that he would do everything he could to help him come back. He had been asked about a report that he might make one or more speeches for Lucas after the Illinois primary.

Mr. Truman repeated a statement that he had made at earlier news conferences—that he would not interest himself in any primary elections except that in his home State of Missouri, where he has indorsed Emory Allison for the Democratic nomination for Senator.

Asked if an agreement had been reached whereby other candidates would withdraw in favor of Allison, the Chief Executive said that the Missouri primary was open to anybody who wanted to run. He added that he was not trying to prevent anybody from running.

fired after he had publicly disagreed with Department of Defense top policies and declared Pentagon chiefs were treating the Navy unfairly, has been on a two-months leave since his ouster. He held a press conference yesterday in Boston after reporting to Navy headquarters to submit his request for retirement March 1. Its acceptance is mandatory under the law.

The 58-year-old admiral told reporters he has no plans for the future, but has had "many offers." He said he'd remain at his home in Westboro, Mass. and close out his Navy affairs in Boston until his retirement is effective.

Of his decision, Denfeld said:

"I felt that under the present circumstances I would be of more service to the Navy and the national defense of the country on the retired list rather than on the active list."

He noted that "everybody in the Navy has to retire eventually." Denfeld could have remained on duty another four years. While declining comment on most questions concerning the controversy, the admiral declared that he has always been for unification and believes that the current "growing pains" eventually will be worked out to the satisfaction of everyone.

Here in Washington, Senator McCarthy loosed another attack on Matthews and Defense Secretary Louis Johnson. Johnson, he told a news conference, is "a dictator who has just about wrecked the Defense Department." Matthews, he added, is "an unfortunate little man who has to be a yes man to hold his job—he has to follow a goose-stepping mood."

lowed by intermittent traces of both snow and sleet.

Traffic was hazardous in the Washington area because of wet—and, in some spots, icy—streets. But except for the home-going rush, there were few accidents and few delays.

Starting with a high of 45 degrees at 12:01 a. m. yesterday, temperatures began to drop. By 4 p. m., thermometers registered 28 degrees—one point lower than the coldest for the month and the fledgling year, recorded on January 8.

Despite the subfreezing weather and the morning's rain—seven-hundredths of an inch had fallen by noon—ground warmth prevented most streets and highways from icing over.

Metropolitan Police said all bridges were slippery. At 5:30 p. m., they were preparing to sand the Freeway and the S. Capitol st. bridge.

Park Police had five crews out yesterday afternoon sanding the Memorial and Highway bridges, and the Tilden st. and Shoreham hills.

The Maryland State Roads Commission sanded parts of the East-West hwy. and 2d ave. in Silver Spring.

The American Automobile Association, however, said the condition was local only "and not too dangerous." The worst spots, the organization added, were in an area 30 miles west of Washington.

denied the right to vote. They are placed in the same category as felons, aliens and the certified mentally ill."

The article points in detail to the slum conditions near the Capitol, hidden, it says, by the city's marble facade. It gives statistics on substandard housing, tells stories of segregation and reports on hospital conditions, particularly at Gallinger, the city institution.

Gallinger Situation Scored

Gallinger patients are so close together "they cross-infect one another," the story charges. It quotes Dr. Joseph Fazekas, chief of staff, as declaring:

"We don't have enough anesthetists to keep our surgical services going. We can't do elective surgery. Patients who need it, just don't get it."

He is also quoted as saying the hospital is so short of drugs it must beg for handouts from the big drug companies. Eighteen volunteer doctors, nurses and technicians, the article says, recently set up a night clinic which they operate without pay "because they couldn't stand seeing patients neglected."

"Nations Capital Hospital"

The staff wants to change Gallinger's name to "The Nation's Capital Hospital" because "that might shame somebody into doing something," the story says.

"How can we sell democracy if we don't dare open our sample case?" the writer asks. "How can we try to democratize the outside world until we have really democratized Washington, D. C.?"

He concludes:

"Let Washington exemplify it through and through. Let's stop rolling out the marble carpet for the visitors—while medieval slums, denial of the suffr local government and Jim Crowism are hidden underneath."

cials have discussed with Capitol Hill supporters a compromise along these lines:

(1) Continuation of selective service machinery at a cost of about eight million dollars a year—the bare minimum for operating of local boards and national and State systems.

(2) Registration and classification of 18-year-old youths to go on as now.

(3) Actual induction of men into uniform would be barred until one of two events occur: (A) passage of a joint resolution authorizing draft calls if Congress is in session; or (B) issuance of an Executive Order by the President if the Senate and House are not meeting.

Depends on Army Decline

Under the latter alternative, the Presiden would have to find that the Army had fallen critically below strength due to a shortage of volunteers and that such lowered strength impairs the national security. He could then order enough men drafted to bring the Army up to the size previously authorized by Congress in the current appropriation bill.

Informed Congressmen feel that if Defense officials can make out a sufficiently strong case the Senate and House will go along with the idea of keeping the selective service system in being. They also believe that many would favor continuing registration and classification of young men provided that there are no inductions unless Congress approves. However, granting the Presidnet power to start drafting is certain to be strongly opposed.

The Administration is expected to present a staunchly bulwarked argument against dropping the draft. Defense Secretary Louis Johnson and Army Secretary Gordon Gray testify today, followed by Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Gen. J. Lawton Collins, Army chief of staff on Monday. Secretary of State Dean Acheson probably will be a witness next Wednesday.

Major plank of the Administration case is that scrapping of the draft law now would do grave harm to our world prestige and particularly endanger the Western European Military Pact. Communists in Europe would use the action to argue it is believed that "America will fight to the last European" and that the United States is willing to expend dollars but not its men in defense of democracy.

Officials also will show that continuation of the draft organization would save four vital months if we have to mobilize in an emergency. It would take this long to get legislation through Congress, set up selective service machinery, register and classify men, history shows.

Supporters of selective service contend in addition that the very presence of a draft law stimulates recruiting. Dropping the system entirely might cut the number of volunteers greatly, it is said.

On the controversial point of permitting President Truman to order inductions, it is argued that requiring more formal action in a world crisis might precipitate war. Should the President be required to call a special session of Congress or declare national emergency before anyone could be drafted to build up the Army in an emergency, such action might cause the other side to attack, proponents of the plan contend.

Independent Agencies Puzzle Over Meaning Of Accumulated Leave

A score of independent Federal agencies yesterday were debating whether to force employes to take their accumulated annual leave.

Various interpretations were being placed on the letter dealing with accrued leave from Representative Thomas (D., Tex.) on both Capitol Hill and in the agencies. The controversial letter follows:

"With a view to relieving the situation as to accrued annual leave, the subcommittee is requiring that you and all agencies absorb the cost of all accrued leave, including the fiscal year 1950, by any method you choose. However, if a cash payment is resorted to, such payment must be made from '50 funds.

There was no doubt about the second paragraph of Thomas' letter. It would require the 40-odd independent agencies to absorb the cost of the 1949 Pay-Reclassification Act out of available funds. A number of them had planned to request deficiency appropriations to cover all or part of the pay bill cost.

The annual leave directive was the puzzler. If the above language stands, several top officials were of the opinion that independent agency employes would be compelled to take all of their annual leave before July 1. In addition, employes wouldn't be allowed to accumulate leave thereafter.

A House member who should know said the above was the intent of the powerful Independent Offices Subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee chairmaned by Thomas. But another member said this was his understanding of the directive:

That the subcommittee wouldn't appropriate new money for this fiscal year to pay the accumulated annual leave of any employes who might be laid off from the independent agencies. The order to absorb the Pay Act cost will force lay-offs in some agencies if it stands.

Another member said it would be "unreasonable" to force employes in the independent agencies to take all of their accumulated leave while allowing employes in other agencies to accrue up to 60 and 90 days.

Appeals will be made to the Senate committee in any event.

Everyone seems to agree that the Congress, in the end, will provide very little new money to pay the cost of the pay acts. The Budget Bureau, however, has already told both the House and Senate committees that deficiencies to cover pay act costs will be recommended only in necessary cases; that most of the cost will be absorbed out of available funds.

CAPITOL HILL: These were among other developments yesterday on Capitol Hill:

The House Post Office & Civil Service Committee agreed to hold hearings next month on the Miller and Morrison bill to reclassify the salaries of postmasters and supervisors:

It agreed to report out the Murray bills to give rural carriers and custodial employes credit for all postal service toward longevity pay raises;

It okayed the appointment of Russell A. Heddleston to head the staff of the Williams subcommittee. A former War Assets employe, Heddleston assisted Representative Clarence Brown (R., Ohio) on his work with the Hoover Commission. The Williams group was directed to make a "spot" survey of Federal agencies to check on work duplication and excesses of personnel;

NOTES: Ruth Scott, finance officer and the first woman employe of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, and Margaret M. Muller, the second woman NACA employe, are retiring today, each after 32 years of service . . . Dr. Esper S. Larsen 3d, yesterday was appointed assistant chief geologist of Interior's Geological Survey . . . Dr. Byron J. Olson has been appointed assistant chief of National Institutes of Health laboratory of infectious diseases at Bethesda . . . Representative Patman (D., Tex.) says: "While Washington may be an archeologist's dream spot, it is unsuited to the demands of modern Government. It is generaly agreed that the time has arrived when the removal of the Capitol should at least be brought up to the blueprint stage."

Family of Seven, Including Four Children, Escape as Fire Destroys Home in Fairfax

By Jack Larts—The Washington Post

ONLY THE STEPS REMAIN—In borrowed clothing, Henry White sits quietly on the steps of his Fairfax home, destroyed by fire, and wonders about the future

By G. Ira Jones—The Washington Post

A family of seven, including four small children, escaped uninjured from their Fairfax home, only a few minutes before it burned to the ground early yesterday.

Safe, but temporarily homeless, are Henry E. White, a jewelry store optician; his wife, Phyllis; their four children, ranging from 2 to 5 years, and White's father, Louis, all of 2133 Lee highway, near Falls Church.

Mrs. White said she awakened about 4 a. m. to find her bedroom so thick with smoke "that my husband and I couldn't even see each other." The entire front of the 2½-story frame house, which they rented, was blazing, she said.

She and her husband quickly roused the children and the grandfather. The whole family fled down the back stairs into the kitchen and outside. Within a few minutes, the entire house was engulfed in flames, she said.

Fire companies from Falls Church, Fairfax, Dunn Loring and Bailey's Crossroads answered the alarm and fought the blaze for an hour and a half, but were unable to save the house.

The fire apparently started in the living room, but its cause was not yet determined, firemen said. White said the family lost about $2000 in property, which represents all of their wordly goods except their auto. They have been given shelter at the home of Mrs. Keith H. Elliott, 729 Quebec pl. ne., who is White's sister.

Roberts Pair Dope Case Jury Out

Final Arguments In Narcotics Trial Marked by Attack On Prosecutor

Judge F. Dickinson Letts completed final instructions to the District Court jury in the Roberts narcotics case late yesterday, and ordered deliberation to begin at 9:45 a. m. today.

The charge to the panel of five women and seven men in the week-long trial climaxed a day of summation arguments which saw the defense make a vitriolic personal attack upon the Government's prosecuting attorney.

James (Jim Yellow) Roberts, 41, described as one of the "big fish" in District dope-peddling circles, and his red-haired wife, Evalina, are standing trial on several charges of illegally transferring cocaine, marijuana and codeine.

Conviction on all 10 counts charged against Roberts could carry a maximum penalty of 50 years in jail and $20,000, and 20 years and $8000 for his wife, who is indicted on 4 counts.

Defense Charges Plot

Opening his final argument to the jury, arm-waving defense attorney Josiah Lyman, in effect, tried to put Assistant United States Attorney Arthur McLaughlin on trial, shouting:

"He has prostituted his office and dragged it throught the slime." Then, taking on Albert A. Spear, veteran Bureau of Internal Revenue chemist, and other Government witnesses, Lyman said the defense "has been framed by a filthy, dirty conspiracy and perjured testimony—for what reason I don't know."

"What Mr. McLaughlin says about this case," said Lyman, "has no more bearing on the truth than the wind blowing through this (courtroom) window."

A Federal narcotics agent, assisted by an undercover man, has testified that Roberts and his wife gave them several marijuana cigarettes; that "Jim Yellow" sold them 6¾ grains of cocaine hydrochloride for $30 at the latter's 744 Girard st. nw., apartment last October 7th and 8th.

Course of Evidence Traced

Dr. Spear testified the evidence introduced by the Government was cocaine, marijuana and codeine.

McLaughlin, tracing the alleged drugs from the time the agents said they secured them from Roberts, asked the jury:

"Just what are the conditions up there (at the Roberts' apartment)? You have heard about the squab dinner they served Watson and Chappell (the Federal narcotics agents). You have heard about Roberts riding around in a 1948 Cadillac . . . Where is the money coming from ? Why was the defense so anxious to conceal pictures of that television set (the agents had testified Roberts claimed it as a $2000 model)?

Decoys Sometimes Permitted

Just what type of people are we dealing with? demanded McLaughlin.

Judge Letts' instructions to the jury, lasting an hour and 10 minutes, emphasized that a verdict be reached on every count of the five indictments.

On the key defense that the Federal agents entered Roberts' home by subterfuge or entrapment through an undecover man, Judge Letts warned:

"It is well settled that decoys may be used to entice criminals and present the opportunity" for committment of a crime. "But decoys are not permissable to entice the innocent and law-abiding," he said.

Oldest Elk, Who Helped Found Musicians' Union, Feted at 90

The Washington Post

Joseph B. Caldwell, 90, greets an old friend, Mrs. Anna Schwartz, also 90, who was on hand to wish him a happy birthday

John Philip Sousa once played second fiddle to the Washington musician honored last night on his ninetieth birthday.

When Joseph B. Caldwell was a lad of 17, he played first violin in the Washington Theater Comique, 11th and C sts. nw., with the then unknown Sousa holding down the second chair.

This was but one of the many memories which returned to the small, happy-eyed and quietly dignified man who spent last evening with 90 friends—one for each year—who gathered to honor him at the Elks Club, 919 H st. nw. He is the oldest living member here.

Among the throng were several cronies who were charter members of Musicians Local 161 (AFL) which he organized in 1901.

And later, a full-sized orchestra composed of elderly musicians who "knew him when" played Happy Birthday, and everyone joined in.

Caldwell, scarcely over 5 feet tall, stood most of the time, shaking hands, remembering names, places and occasions.

Once it was the time in his teens when he played with riverboat bands; or when for 13 seasons he led the band at the pavilion at Riverview where the Mary Washington, the Samuel J. Pertz, the Excelsior, the Harry Randell, the George Leary and the Pilot Boy plied with pleasure seekers as cargo.

He even recalled the only time in his life he had caught a cold. That was the rainy, slushy day back in 1909 when he had led the District's First Regiment Band in the Taft inaugural parade. "It was so wet," he mused, "that our overcoat bottoms floated in water as we passed the reviewing stand."

Caldwell has a crop of silver hair, stands erect and thinks quickly. His condition isn't an accident, he said, attributing his success to a secret oil formula which he uses for his daily rubdown.

His daughter, Mrs. Mary K. Curtin, with whom he lives at 518 Varnum st. nw., said she thought it consisted of rosewater, witch hazel and glycerin, but she wasn't sure.

Police Squads To Check on Terrorism At Schools

Major Barrett Says Vandalism Known But No Reports Of Other Acts

Major Robert J. Barrett, superintendent of police, yesterday said he had asked two police squads to "look into" reports of terrorism and vandalism in the District public schools.

The reports were aired at a Board of Education meeting Wednesday, when Garnet C. Wilkinson, first assistant superintendent in charge of Negro schools, asked for "laws with teeth" to protect school children from youthful gangs.

Major Barrett said that there has been vandalism in connection with the school system for some time, "but this is the first time I have ever heard of any terrorism."

Barrett said he had received no official information on the reported acts. Members of the Special Investigation Squad, which investigates subversive activities, missing persons reports and other similar studies, and members of the Juvenile Squad, will look into the reports, the police chief said.

Meanwhile, a congressional investigation of the juvenile terrorism reports has been promised by Representative James C. Davis (D., Ga.) chairman of the special House District subcommittee studying crime and law enforcement here.

Molesting of students was first reported at Banneker Junior High School Tuesday. Similar reports since have come from other Negro schools. Vandalism has occurred in schools in both white and Negro schools, School Board members were told.

No Bystanders In Bias Fight, Rabbi Asserts

No one can be an "innocent bystander" in the fight against prejudice, Rabbi Ariel Goldburg of Temple Beth Ahabah, Richmond, Va., declared last night.

Rabbi Goldburg was one of four speakers at a forum discussion following the premiere Washington showing of the film "Prejudice" at the First Congregational Church, 10th and G sts. nw.

The showing was jointly sponsored by the Washington Federation of Churches and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Although legislation is an important means of fighting prejudice, Rabbi Goldburg said, it must have public opinion behind it.

The Right Rev. Angus Dun, Episcopal Bishop of Washington and president of the federation, pointed out that the Golden Rule, fundamental to Christianity, is "bad news for prejudice."

Bishop Dun said that the emphasis upon the Jews as the slayers of Christ has been an important factor in the growth of anti-Semitism. The only answer to this assertion, he said, is that Christ was killed by factors "in our humanity and not what is peculiar to the Jews."

Dr. Francis J. Brown of the American Council on Education said that "prejudice . . . is an adult attitude." By the time a child becomes aware of group differences, he said, it has also accepted the attitudes of its own groups.

Even the church is sometimes guilty of developing prejudice toward those who worship differently, he said. Tolerance of other groups is not enough, he said, urging that ways be found for different groups to work together in achieving common goals.

Prejudice damages both the bigot and his victim, Dr. Walter G. Daniel of Howard University told the audience of more than 300 persons. He pointed out that the annual financial losses because of racial and religious prejudice run into millions and that "the spiritual injury cannot be measured."

Barron, Home From Florida, Seeks Sesqui Fair Manager

Carter T. Barron, executive vice chairman of the Sesqui Commission, came back to his desk yesterday and the Sesqui's Freedom Fair plans began to hum again.

Barron, who had been recuperating in Florida a month, plunged into the job of finding a general manager—or director-general, as Barron terms it—to run the big Freedom Fair.

"I've got three names in mind at the moment," he said. "Three others I approached wanted fabulous figures to take the job. Maybe we can borow someone from private industry."

Barron said he expects the full Sesqui Commission will meet about February 1 to formally postpone the fair from this summer to April 15, 1951, and to choose the man who will boss it.

The full commission is also due to discuss a suggestion from the American Institute of Architects to junk the "U. S. A." building plan and hold a Nation-wide design competition.

Senator M. M. Neely (D., W. Va.), commission member and chairman of the Senate District Committee, to whom the AIA made the suggestion, said yesterday he approved the idea and would take it up at the next committee meeting.

3 Hurt, 1 Critically as Auto Overturns in 80-Mile Chase

Three men were injured, one critically, when their auto overturned a Beltsville, Md., early yesterday, while they were being chased by a Maryland State trooper at speeds reported up to 80 miles an hour.

In critical condition at Freedmen's Hospital was Arthur W. Dozier, 26 of 1940 Bennett pl. ne., who suffered a fractured jaw, cerebral concussion and severe face cuts. Police said he was the driver of the car.

A passenger, Jack S. Stone, 30, of 1604 Abingdon dr., Alexandria, is in fair condition at Leland Memorial Hospital with a broken nose, hand injury and multiple cuts and bruises.

Another passenger, William I. Groff, jr., 23, of 4310 New Hampshire ave. nw., was treated for bruises and shock and released.

The car failed to make a curve on the Washington-Baltimore blvd. at Beltsville, struck a guard rail and overturned, according to Trooper Robert Knight.

Knight said he first saw the car speeding north past the Plant Industry Station of the Agriculture Department in Beltsville shortly before 4 a. m. As he gave chase, his speedometer reached 80 miles an hour, he said. He added he was forced to swerve off the highway, when the other car overturned.

Knight had a busy night on the boulevard. Two hours earlier he had to give up chasing a speeding car in order to pursue an auto which he discovered was stolen in the District, he said.

The five persons in the stolen car were picked up by Laurel police after Knight alerted them by radio. One of the men will be turned over to District police today, Laurel police said. The other four were released.

District police said the car was reported stolen Wednesday from the rear of the 1600 block of 14th st. nw., by its owner, John H. Stadtler, of 1437 Yuma st. nw.

Scores Seek Census Jobs On First Day

A steady stream of applicants for the job of census taker visited the District office at 1622 H st. nw. yesterday.

A spokesman said close to 100 persons inquired about the job within 3 hours after the office opened. Each was given an application blank to take home, fill out and return by mail to the office.

There are about 1300 such jobs open in Metropolitan Washington. The majority are for enumerators, who will make a door-to-door canvass.

The District office has 830 jobs open. Montgomery County, with an office at 112 N. Potomac st., Hagerstown, has 110 jobs. Prince Georges County (office at 227 Prince Georges st., Annapolis) has 115 jobs.

The office for Alexandria and Arlington, Fairfax, Loudoun and Prince William Counties is located at the Naval Torpedo Station, Alexandria. There are 270 jobs open there.

Final selection of applicants for the jobs will be based on oral and written tests. Taking of the census will begin April 1.

Mary Society Anniversary

The 100th anniversary of the death of the founder of the Society of Mary will be marked at a mass at Immaculate Conception Church, 8th and N sts. nw., at 8:30 a. m. today.

Warring Case

Detectives at Work Again On Robbery

Five picked detectives resumed their investigations here yesterday into the holdup-robbery of Emmett Warring, once the overlord of Washington's numbers syndicate.

Warring was reportedly "taken" for at least $20,000 by three bandits who slugged his brother-in-law, trussed up a maid at Warring's home—3900 Macomb st. nw.,—and forced Warring to open a wall safe.

Major Robert J. Barrett, superintendent of police, confirmed the robbery last week. But yesterday he declined to confirm reports that three of the five detectives had made a trip out-of-town on a "hot" lead in the case.

Barrett charged when the holdup was disclosed that it was committed by "vicious, out-of-town professional mobsters."

Car Strikes Policeman; Youth Is Fined $25

Earl Gladden, 20, of 1754 Seaton pl. nw., who said he was an Armstrong High School student, yesterday was fined $25 or 15 days for failing to give full time and attention to his driving and having a faulty windshield wiper.

Gladden was arrested last December 18 after his car had hit Police Sergt. Phillip Burton knocking the latter to the pavement near Uline's Arena, 3d and M sts. ne.

ABC Finishes Hearing on License Shift

The Alcoholic Beverage Control Board yesterday concluded its three-day hearing on a petition of the Pickwick Liquor store, 1003 Connecticut ave. nw., to transfer its license to 1529 17th st. nw. The board took the application under advisement.

Frank Ridge, 1630 R st. nw., a real-estate agent, was questioned on a petition he submitted Wednesday containing the names of 600 residents of the 17th st. section favoring the transfer.

Ridge told the board he was a friend of John Gaines, proprietor of the liquor store, and was entrusted with the preparation of the list by Gaines.

Two members of the District of Columbia Recreation Department protested to the board Monday on the basis that a playground is going to be built nearby. Five liquor store proprietors in the neighborhood testified Wednesday that there are enough liquor stores there.

'Drugs and Skin' Topic At Naval Hospital

Drug reactions of the skin will be discussed at 1 p. m. today in a staff conference at the U. S. Naval Hospital, Bethesda, Md. Local doctors are invited to attend.

Speakers will include Lieut. Comdr. R. B. Hallborg and Comdr. W. C. Marsh, both of the Medical Corps, U. S. Navy.

Lag in Postal Rate Rise Hit By Donaldson

Postmaster General Jesse M. Donaldson last night declared his "biggest problem" is not reorganization—as claimed by departmental critics—but rather increasing postal rates to keep pace with the rise in operating costs.

Speaking to the Society for Advancement of Management at the YWCA, the one-time letter carrier pointed out that railroad rates "fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission," airplane rates "fixed by the Civil Aeronautics Board" and postal salaries fixed by "the Congress" have all risen and the Postmaster General can do nothing about such matters.

"In private business, the price would be increased when costs go up," he said. But when he proposed an increase in rates, "Congress didn't pass it. Instead they passed a salary increase costing another 150 million last year," Donaldson declared.

The entire postal deficit could be wiped out in one swoop if subsidies other than those paid to transportation units were abolished, he declared. He then launched into a rundown of losses incurred in handling various classes of mail.

Distribution of second-class mail —newspapers and magazines—is subsidized to the extent of 210 million dollars this year, Donaldson said. He noted, grinning broadly, that "publishers write editorials opposing all subsidies except the very generous one they have themselves."

Elsie Carper Named to Head Newspaper Guild

Elsie Carper, Washington Post reporter, was elected president of the Washington Newspaper Guild (CIO) without opposition yesterday.

Also elected without opposition were Howard Dobson, Associated Press, vice president; Seymour Brandwein, Bureau of National Affairs, secretary, and Milton Magruder, United Press, reelected treasurer.

Chosen members of the Guild's executive board from a field of 10 were: Philip H. Price, Washington Star and retiring Guild president; Paul Schmick, Washington Star; William S. Pryor, Times Herald; Eugene Thomas, Daily News; Charles W. Gosnell, jr., Star; Albert H. Laidlaw, Times Herald, and W. Penn Lowe, Washington Post.

Relief Cases Up

Need Cited For Workers In Welfare

Washington's backlog of relief cases is going up because qualified social workers can't be recruited to screen welfare applicants.

John W. Tramburg director of the District's Public Welfare Department, said yesterday he needs five additional social workers to handle relief applicants. The District Commissioners have approved hiring of this number, he said, but the Civil Service Commission has not been able to recruit them.

The job pays a salary of $3100 per year. Tramburg said that CSC furnished a register of 23 names, but none of these persons accepted.

Tramburg said the average monthly case load now is about 625. He said that social workers have been able to "sandwich in" emergency relief cases because of cancellations in the regular appointment schedule.

Maryland U. Dormitory Hit by $450 Blaze

A trash basket fire in Temporary Dormitory No. 3, behind the Byrd Stadium, on the campus of the University of Maryland caused $450 damage last night.

The blaze was confined to a room occupied by Lester Shores, Silver Spring; Rozier Steinbach, Joppa, Md., and David Rosenberg, Baltimore, none of whom were in the dormitory at the time.

Father of 13 Prefers Jail to $50 Fine

A Washington jeweler who allegedly makes $1500 a month yesterday chose to go to jail for 30 days rather than pay a $50 fine for beating his wife.

Wearing two blackened eyes and a cut lip, Mrs. Selma Compton, 41, appeared in Hyattsville police court yesterday with her tale of what happened after she sought a District Court order here compelling her husband to support her and their 13 children.

Near her sat her husband, Howard H. Compton, 43, a mild-appearing man neatly dressed in a brown suit.

On Monday, Mrs. Compton filed a suit charging that since leaving them December 19, Compton, whose jewelry and watch repair business is at 1730 G st. nw., had provided his family of 14 only $30 a week support. She charged in her suit that his net income was $1500 monthly.

Has 13 Children

On Tuesday night, said Mrs. Compton, her husband appeared at 3718 Fortieth ave., Cottage City, Md., where she lives with 12 of her children (the thirteenth is in college).

Unfortunately, she related, the door has no lock. Despite all her efforts to hold it, her husband forced his way in, she said, and he inquired why she had filed the suit.

Having inquired, she said, he let her have it with both fists.

Wednesday, Mrs. Compton swore out a warrant for her husband. When he heard about it, Compton surrendered to Prince Georges County police.

But he chose to spend Wednesday night in jail rather than put up $100 bond.

Declines to Testify

Compton pleaded not guilty yesterday but declined to testify.

Fifty dollars for assault; rapped Judge Alan Bowie.

"If you don't mind, Your Honor, I'd rather go to jail," said Compton.

The judge replied: "All right, you can go to jail. I can give you six months or as much as three years in this court if you like it."

Resolutely, Compton started serving his sentence yesterday.

Gains Are Cited

Jaycees Get High Honor From Chest

Despite the failure to achieve its goal, the 1950 Community Chest campaign probably will put Washington second in the Nation in gains over last year, Campaign Chairman Frank J. Luchs said yesterday.

Luchs spoke at a Junior Chamber of Commerce luncheon at the Burlington Hotel, where he conferred upon the Jaycees the highest Chest award—"Order of the Red Feather."

The Junior Chamber is the first organization or corporate group ever so honored. Previously the award had gone to only 19 individuals.

The campaign this year showed a gain of 20,000 donors and more than $100,000 in money over last.

"It will probably put the National Capital Community second only to Detroit in percentage advance over 1949 results and sixth among the 10 largest Community Chest fund enterprises in percentage of goal," said Luchs. The drive fell 10 percent short of its goal.

Caps Spurt in Second Half to Sock Bullets, 81-68

The Washington Post Sports
Friday, January 20, 1950 3B

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Blue Plate Special:

VIDEO: Sports promoters and ball club owners who once feared television as the ruination of their attractions are now apparently cottoning to the idea. They're convinced, at long last, that it's here to stay.

Right here in Washington, for instance, the Nats, who once took a dim view of video, are now trying to expand their coverage and permit Baltimore and Richmond TV audiences to see big league baseball games. The Nats were one of the pioneers of television in the major leagues and have now accepted it as one of the best advertising mediums to come along in years.

POVICH

The Washington Caps are undoubtedly kicking themselves for not permitting their home games to be telecast this year. Last season the Uline Arena management received $300 per game and enjoyed their best financial season. Many persons who'd never seen a pro basketball game were smitten with the great play of George Mikan, Bones McKinney and the rest of the pro hot shots. They liked what they saw on television and it led them to the box office.

This season, however, the Caps jacked up their video rights so high that the sponsor couldn't or wouldn't meet the new demands. Result: Caps attendance, except when Mikan is in town, is way down.

Only boxing seems to be hit by video. But when boxing bounces back and offers first rate attractions, fans will beat a path to the box office once again, video or not.

TWENTY-FIVE PERCENTER: Joe DiMaggio has indicated that he will accept a salary cut for 1950, and 95 percent of the players in the American League would like to have as their year's pay the size of the slash DiMag is getting from the Yankees.

It is reported that he will be cut back from $100,000 to $75,000, which would be the maximum of 25 percent under the agreement between the Players' Committee and the club owners. DiMag played in only 70-odd games last season, and in many a contest he merely put in a pinch-hitting appearance. He did hit .346, but he didn't come close to earning the highest salary ever paid a Yankee player.

DiMaggio might not be offered as much as $75,000 for 1950, were it not for the sage counsel of his friend Toots Shor, who insisted that Joe turn down all bonus arrangements last year and hold out for a flat $100,000 salary. Shor was counting on the possibility that DiMag might be out with injuries and thus subject to a wage cut for 1950.

Actually, DiMaggio would have netted $110,000 from the Yanks last season if he had signed the bonus clauses, but Shor wanted for him (1) the distinction of being the first player in history to earn $100,000 flat and (2) the protection of at least a $75,000 contract in 1950.

HIKE: Clark Griffith's courage, at least, never had been impugned and there is another manifestation of it this week with the announcement that the Washington Club, after finishing eighth, is upping the prices of some of the Stadium seats.

The temptation is to haul off and bat Griff down for such effrontery, but somehow it can be easily resisted. The prices went up on only 2959 of the 30,000 Stadium seats, those choice pews around the infield. The boxes were lifted 50 cents and the reserved grandstand seats two bits. The Nats are still giving their fans the cheapest prices in the major leagues.

Griffith says frankly that he is trying to improve a fiscal position that has left his club at a disadvantage. He points out that the average admission to his park last season totaled only 82 cents, compared to the average price of $1.38 per seat in Boston. Other cities average as much as $1.20.

His own prices, when set, are static, Griffith points out, in contrast to policy in other cities where prices are on a sliding scale, depending on the attraction. You can still get into his park for 60 cents, ninety cents and a buck-twenty-five.

Pros Plan 14 Teams, Fail to Act On Buffalo

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

Philadelphia, Jan. 19.—After 10 hours behind locked doors, owners of the National American Football League tonight found a key for a 14-team schedule, but took no action on admitting either Buffalo or Houston as the fourteenth team.

Commissioner Bert Bell emerged from the secret meeting late tonight and refused to say that Houston's chances were in the ash can, but that's what everyone else was saying. Buffalo is said to be the only team being considered for admittance.

All Bell told was the truth—that no action had been taken on Buffalo or Houston.

Marshall Envisions Schedule

George Marshall, president of the Washington Redskins, was so certain that Buffalo would be voted in at tomorrow's session that he gave reporters an "idea of what the 1950 Redskin schedule would be."

"Subject to revision, of course," Marshall said, "the Redskins will probably play the Cleveland Browns, Baltimore Colts, Chicago Cards, Philadelphia Eagles, New York Giants and Pittsburgh Steelers at home. On the road, we'll probably meet Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, New York (Giants), Buffalo, Detroit and the Browns."

A motion to admit Buffalo, made during the afternoon session, still had not been acted on when the owners adjourned for the night.

Two motions were made to increase NAFL membership to 14 teams and to admit Buffalo. They had not reached a vote.

A Change of Sentiment

Bell said that at one time he thought it was only a matter of minutes before a vote would be taken. At the time, Bell frankly admitted, he thought the vote would be against admittance of a fourteenth club.

Then Bell said the sentiment appeared to change. After further discussion, the swing appeared to be toward admittance of another team. And that team, observers were sure, was Buffalo.

Bell claimed that the owners were reluctant to vote on increasing the membership until they know what the schedule will be and how the teams will be divided into divisions.

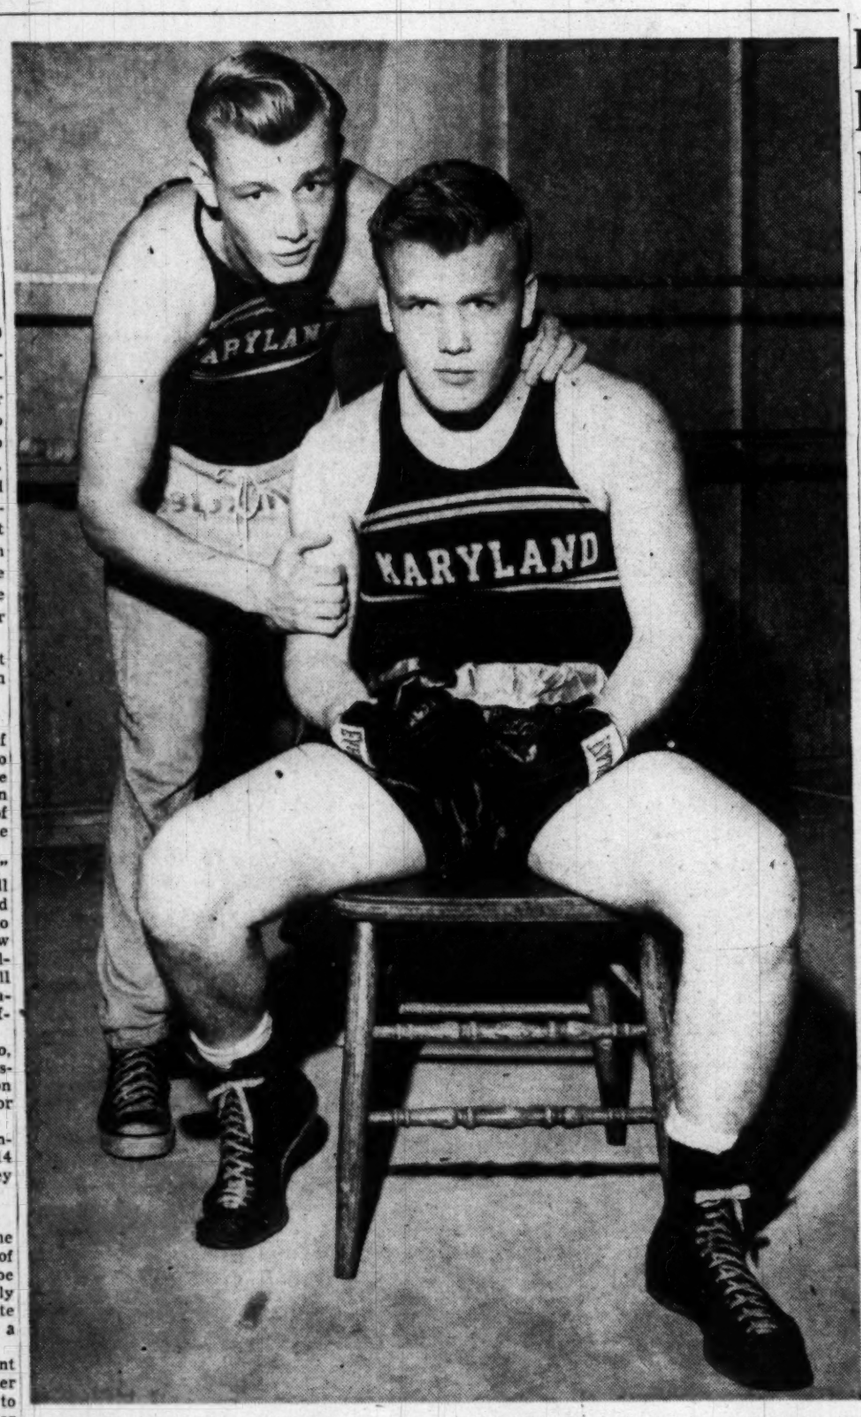
No doubt about it, the division is the big roadblock. Everybody wants to play in the division with the top drawing clubs. They all want to play the Chicago Bears, Philadelphia Eagles and Cleveland Browns.

It was reported they may defer until June 1 the division of the excess All-America Conference men from the Los Angeles Dons, Buffalo Bills, Chicago Hornets and players from the New York Yanks not signed by the New York Bulldogs.

The league player contracts expire June 1 and such a postponement might avoid legal complications.

They may set up a brand new college draft list, reserving only the right of Detroit to Notre Dame's All-America Leon Hart.

In cases where the three surviving All-America teams—San Francisco, Baltimore and Cleveland—conflict with the National teams in men on their reserve lists, Bell might be made the arbitrator.



BROTHER ACT—George (Baby Face) Fuller, seated, and his brother, Charlie, aren't the only brothers on the Maryland varsity boxing team. The Oliver family—Tom and Paul—will also strike a blow for the Terrapins. The Terps open January 28 against The Citadel

Bob Feerick, Reiser Lead Big Rally in 3d Quarter

Special to The Washington Post.

Baltimore, Jan. 19.—Bob Feerick, Washington playing coach, and Chick Reiser, ex-Bullet hero, led the Capitols to an 81-68 conquest of Baltimore here tonight as the two National Basketball Association feudists renewed their rivalry here.

Reiser got 19 points, 12 in the second period, while Feerick contributed 12 timely points. He got eight of them—six in a row—to spark the deciding surge in the second half.

A three-point play by Ed Sadowski just before the buzzer gave Baltimore a 22-20 first period edge. The burley pivot man, scoring from under the hoop, and Paul Hoffman, accounted for 19 of Baltimore's 22 points.

Reiser, Nichols Get Hot

Chick Reiser and Jack Nichols came off the bench at the tag end of the first session got under way and proceeded to send the Caps ahead.

After five minutes, the count was 30 30. Then Reiser got hot. He turned two interceptions into baskets and got four field goals altogether. His long set shot gave the Caps a 39-38 edge at halftime. Feerick then enjoyed his shot. It came early in the third session with Washington nursing a slim 45-44 edge.

He first banged in a two pointer, converted a brace of fouls and then dropped another long one-hander to shove the Caps ahead, 51-44.

Baltimore rebounded as Budko netted a jump shot and Dolhon made a free throw but McKinney dunked an overhead set and Feerick came through with a twisting layup for 55-47 and Baltimore never caught up.

'Creates New Fans'

Nats Plan To Expand Video Scope

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

Satified that television is a boon to attendance, the Nats want to expand video coverage of their home games to Baltimore and Richmond.

"Television creates new fans for baseball," said Nats Vice President Calvin Griffith last night, "and we're all for it. Look what it's done for wrestling."

Griffith admitted that officials of the Washington baseball club had been conferring with a local television group and "we hope we can work something out by February 1."

When They're on Road

Telecasts of Griffith Stadium baseball to Baltimore and Richmond would be made when those two teams are on the road. Baltimore is in the Class Triple A International League, Richmond in the Class B Piedmont League.

Under a recent Government ruling, major league teams are not required to obtain permission from neighboring minor league towns to air or televise their games when the minor league teams are away from home.

Griffith said he was hopeful of completing arrangements for expanded video coverage of the Nats before February 1 when the American and National Leagues hold a radio-video conference in New York.

The Nats started telecasts of Griffith Stadium games midway of the 1947 season.

No Room for Caps

Meanwhile, the Washington basketball Caps, who tuned themselves off the TV dial this year with heavy financial demands, are itching to be televised again, immediately, but it appears impossible.

All four Washington video stations have commercial commitments on Wednesday and Saturday nights when the Caps play home games. The Caps even have a sponsor, but television has no time on its hands for the Caps.

The Caps received approximately $300 per game last year and asked $1000 per game for video rights this season. Dumont Station WTTG and its sponsor reportedly offered the local pros $800 per game this season, but Mike Uline, who owns the Caps, rejected the bid.

Coast League Wants To Curb Television

San Diego, Calif., Jan. 19 (AP). The Pacific Coast League's directors today called for a curb on televising of major league baseball games.

The directors were frankly concerned least Nation-wide televising of the games would keep coast fans away from league parks.

Catholic U. Wins, 69-61

Baltimore, Jan. 19 (AP).—The Catholic University basketball team made 30 points in the last quarter to defeat Johns Hopkins 69-61, in a Mason-Dixon Conference contest tonight.

The Washingtonians were trailing by 22 points with 14 minutes of the ball game remaining.

All of a sudden, the quintet started potting the ball in from all angles and Hopkins' seemingly safe lead started to dwindle.

At the end of the third quarter, Hopkins still led, 51-39. During the final period, Catholic scored on 12 of its 21 field goal attempts, while Hopkins could only connect with two of its 22 tries.

Don Oliver, former District AAU star, who boxed on Maryland's 1949 team as a 145 pounder is back this year at 155.

Kayoed Fighter Unconscious At Hospital

Pittsburgh, Jan. 19 (AP). Heavyweight Henry Jones of Detroit was unconscious in Mercy Hospital after being kayoed at 1:42 of the first round of his scheduled 8-round main bout with Bob Baker of Pittsburgh tonight in Aragon Gardens.

Dr. James Flinn said Jones' condition apparently is not serious ut that the fighter would be kept in the hospital 48 hours for observation.

Jones apparently suffered concussion when he was knocked down and the back of his head struck the floor of the ring.

The victory was the twelfth of Baker's professional career. He has not lost a fight. A left hook, his first solid blow, was the finisher. Baker weighed 196, Jones 184.

Billy Mitchell in Hurdles

Georgetown, Maryland Run Tonight in Inquirer's Meet

Hoya freshman Jim Fielding is entered in the 50- and 70-yard dashes. He won the 100 at the Evening Star games in Washington last week and was second in the 80-yard sprint. His time in the century was 9.8. Among his competitors will be Marcelles Boston, D. C. boy, who is a sophomore at Iowa.

Bob Palmer and Tyson Creamer will represent Maryland in the 1000-yard handicap and one of them will anchor the relay team with Salvanelli, Bob Browning and George McGowan.

Two foreign runners, winners of their American debuts, match strides for the first time in the classic mile.

Ireland's John Barry, victorious in the 2-mile run at Washington [illegible] Sweden, who showed a clean pair of heels to American competition in the Sugar Bowl mile at New Orleans, tangle with five top-notch performers from this country.

Harrison Dillard of Cleveland, Olympic 100-meter champion with a better reputation as a hurdler, seeks his fourth straight Inquirer win in the 50-yard jaunt over the obstacles.

—Compromises Students' Honesty—

Villanova President Blasts Purity Code as 'Subterfuge'

Miami, Fla., Jan. 19 (AP).—Father Francis X. McGuire, president of Ilanova College, today called the NCAA's purity action "a subterfuge."

"Do you mean to tell me that there are only seven schols in America which don't live up to the NCAA code?" he asked Jack Bell, Miami Herald columnist and former sports editor, in an interview.

"If ever there was a foundation upon which to build for basic honesty in this Nation it is in our schools," he said. "What kind of idea of honesty does a college athlete get as he sees, and is a part of all this subterfuge?"

Since September I've been in comunication with Dr. Leib (Dr. Karl E Leib of Iowa, head of the NCAA) on this matter," Father McGuire said. "He expressed a belief that everything would work out satisfactorily after I told him we were willing to comply with NCAA rulings, although it would wreck our athletic program because we've no jobs for students on our campus.

"I was asked to the NCAA meting and stated our position to the executive board, saying Villanova is willing to comply.

"I was asked when we could comply and replied that we could not do it at once, because the second semester opens very soon. I left that room with the definite impression that Villanova, complying with the code, would not be subject to any further action.

"The attempt to expel us was beaten but later I received notice from Tug (Kenneth L.) Wilson, Big Ten commissioner, that Villanova cannot participate in any NCAA events because Villanova has not complied with the code 'as of Sept. 2.'

"And Dr. Leib has been telling me all fall the matter would be discussed at the January meeting."

Colonials Anxious to Become Basketball Big Shots Again

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

GEORGE WASHINGTON University is going back to big-time basketball.

Coach Bill Reinhart is trying to add such schools as Bradley, St. John's, Ohio State and Oklahoma A & M to the G. W. schedule.

He has some promising sophomore and freshman talent in the ranks with more on the way to go with the big school additions.

Before Reinhart moved from the G. W. helm to the Kings Point, N. Y., Merchant Marines during the war, the Colonials played those teams, plus Loyola of Chicago, Minnesota, Toledo and Kansas State before good crowds

Now Reinhart is back, and Athletic Director Max Farrington says "there's no reason why G. W can't have the best basketball team and schedule in the Nation.

"We have a good gym to practice in and we need only about 10 good basketball players and a good schedule. Some day, perhaps, we'll have a big field house, too."

Reinhart is paying a lot of attention to his crop of freshmen. His yearling crew has won eight out of nine games, losing by six points to the Fort Meade team which beat the Washington and Lee and V. M. I. varsities.

All This and Escalators Too—In Texas, Of Course

That Man McCarthy Plans 180,000-Seat Covered Stadium

HOUSTON, TEX., Jan. 19. (AP):—Engineering plans for Oilman Glenn McCarthy's proposed covered municipal stadium for Houston involves an aluminum roof, escalators and a seating capacity that could be juggled anywhere from 110,000 to 130,000—or eventually 180,000.

McCarthy revived visions of such a "stadium of tomorrow" while appearing before National-American Professional Football League officials today in Philadelphia. He hopes to obtain a Houston franchise in the league Consulting Engineer Weldon Appelt, who designed the stadium, and retired Oilman O. H. Carlisle have been backing the project for months.

Appelt is confident the stadium could be built for less than 6 million dollars.

An architect's sketch gives the stadium the appearance of a giant circus tent.

Sections of the aluminum roof, Appelt said, could be rolled back within five minutes, making it possible for events to be staged in the open air or under cover.

Escalators would carry high-seat customer to the upper levels. The stadium would have 110,000 permanent seats, and another 20,000 could be added on a temporary basis.

The design included structural facilities that would permit permanent additions that would boost the seating capacity to a maximum of 180,000.

Appelt said the stadium's facilities could be converted quickly so as to handle football, baseball, rodeos or other forms of entertainment.

"Of all the outstanding men I have talked to about the stadium, McCarthy seemed best able to grasp its possibilities," Appelt said.

Carlisle said he would like to see the stadium built in Houston's downtown Civic Center but figures McCarthy would prefer to build it on a site he once offered to donate for a municipal stadium.

The site is about 5 miles south of downtown Houston and within a few blocks of McCarthy's 18-million-dollar Shamrock Hotel.

Dead Month Ends

Happy Days For Anglers Start Sunday

By Ralph Murdock

ANGLERS, if you are beginning to show signs of renewed vigor there's a reason—the end of "Dead Month" is just around the corner.

Murdock

The end comes officially on Sunday. "Dead Month" is just that dull period that pops up each year.

It's the time when fishing tackle is laid aside, the angler tries to forget about fishing and devotes his full attention to the family circle.

But come January 22 and he is a changed man. He knows it is "Benny Dement Day." He grabs his fishing rod, his tackle box, kisses his wife goodby with a lighted cigar in his mouth and heads for Allens Fresh to join his cronies.

He has only one thought in mind—that the 1950 fishing will be much better than any previous year.

ALLENS FRESH is located just this side of the Potomac River Bridge at the head of the Wicomico River.

The official committee of the sponsoring group, the Dry Land Fishing Club is: general chairman and coordinator, Harry "Bloodworm" West; commissary, Harry Sollers and Lou Gramlick; minnows, Joe and Lou Perron; transportation, Fred Gooch; prizes, Milton Silver and Sid Atlas; reception, Ed Kemper and Chet Ailes.

Here's how the bow-wows made out in the Southern Maryland Beagle Club Trials. In the 15-inch class the winners were: First, Dunbarton Dandy, owned by Jim Rowen, Owens Mill, Md.; second, Hy-Valley Midge, owned by Gibson Moore, Edmonston, Md.; third, Peerless Q. Mischief, owned by Charles B. Iler, Seneca, Md.; fourth, Bashfort Bellman, owned by James G. Webber, Knoxville, Md.; reserve, Trailine Jackie, owned by L. G. Williams.

IN THE 13-INCH CLASS two little beagles, sired by Field Champion Pleasant Run Banker, were successful in winning the first and fourth events. The results were: First, Fairlawn Girlie, owned by James B. Duvall, 5111 P st., Coral Hills, Md.; second, Potomac View Hunter, owned by J. J. Marshall, 1467 Ridge st. se.; third, Berwinian Skipper, owned by W. A. Bushey, Falls Church, Va.; fourth, Fairlawn Penney, owned by Francis R. Langley, and reserve, Wakefield Jerry owned by James G. Webber, Knoxville, Md.

Seneca, Md., was the scene of action and 54 little beagles participated. The judges were Stewart Schwartz and John Fischer of Baltimore, Norman E. Michael of the District and Fred Carter of Forestville, Md.

Bill Bennings . . .

Dear Folks:

Maryland, harassed by New Jersey racing, must keep an eye in another direction, warns John A. Manfuso, vice president of the Horsemen's Benevolent Protection Association for Maryland, West Virginia and Delaware. He predicts that Pennsylvania will seek the Yankee dollar through the turf, and soon, pointing out that the State wants the money to finance a veteran's bonus already passed by the Legislature. Of course, Pennsylvania would concentrate tracks around Philadelphia, a new blow to Havre de Grace and enough of a menace to make the other tracks sit up and take notice. Looks as if the only course for Maryland tracks is to expect smaller mutuel handle and get tax relief from the State. By the way, Charles Town's first meeting, opening March 4, will not be affected by the recent Maryland date shuffle.—Bill.

Many Other Things Must Be Corrected

Dundalk, Md., Jan. 19 (AP).—George R. Norris, president of a newly formed association of harness horse owners, announced today the group will seek higher purses and a reduction of starting fees at Maryland tracks.

The group known as the Harness Horsemen Association, Inc., was formed at Smyrna, Del., by 197 owners from Maryland, Pennsylvania, Delaware and Virginia.

Norris was a member of the Maryland Racing Commission from 1935 to 1941.

He said the new association will try "to keep harness racing on the high plane it was before parimutuel betting went into effect. We don't think the sport is being carried out by management in the way it should be."

Norris said the association's specific demands from track management will be decided upon at future meetings. He added "A lot of things have got to be corrected."

Four harness tracks will operate in Maryland next summer, at Oxon Hill, Laurel, Baltimore and Ocean City.

Nats Might Sign Haight

Midgets Would Be in Demand if Baseball Falls for NCAA Unlimited Substitutions Idea

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

IF YOU HEAR the Nats have signed a Singer midget, don't laugh.

"What would the club do with him even if he were a dehydrated Ted Williams?" you ask.

Haight

Well, in addition to going rather insane over the Sanity Code at its recent meeting, the National Collegiate Athletic Association was productive of a suggestion by one member that was lost in the mumbo jumbo about portal-to-portal pay for footballers.

Motivated by a desire to see more college men participate in baseball, somebody advocated either the platoon system or unlimited substitutions.

If the idea spread to the majors, why wouldn't the Nats as well as other clubs, sign midgets?

Suppose a pitcher was going good and the opposition wanted a man on base. So up to the plate walks a 3-foot 4-inch player—result, a sure base on balls.

Of course, under the put 'em in and take 'em out at will rule, the midget would be yanked off first in favor of a sprint champion who would be replaced in the field later by a defensive player.

If baseball followed the present trend of football for specialists, it could be something awful. For instance, instead of learning all the fundamentals of pitching, a man would have to be good at only one.

INSTEAD OF SIGNALING the pitcher for a curve, the catcher would ask the bench for a curve-ball man. If a fast ball was needed for the next pitch, another guy could be called. No wear and tear on individuals—a new pitcher for every situation.

Players would be signed because they could field, even if they couldn't lift a bat and if they could hit, it wouldn't matter if they were lousy fielders.

There'd be an infield to play deep and another platoon to play in and an outfield for lefthand hitters and another for righthanders, etc.

Oldtime pitchers might keep a job just to pick men off base, being yanked, of course, before they made a pitch.

SPEAKING OF UMPIRES, perhaps the unlimited substitutions would be adopted for officials, too.

For instance, if somebody yelled, "Kill the umpire," the ump would be shoved into a handy lethal chamber and a new one would go in action. Of course, a lot of umpires could be used up in a season.

I shudder to think of the scorekeepers. They'd have to tabulate the innings by volumes and a box score would look like the annual edition of the Wall Street Journal.

Come to think of it, perhaps the Nats would sign me.

Suppose they had three men on base, two out and a run needed to win.

Well, they could send me up to bat.

My feet would be in the batter's box, so the other club couldn't say I was crowding the plate eve if my tummy was hanging over it.

Why I'd be a cinch to get hit by a pitched ball!

BRANDON

On the Town

By Georganne Williamson

"HOT DIGGETY DOG!" you may hear at the Mayflower these days, and you must admit the Lounge is going in for variety in entertainment. The exclamation comes from Henry Brandon, youthful band leader with a still younger band. They hail from the spontaneous Western climes and believe in spiking things up every now and then. Their Dixieland music is interspersed throughout the evening's dancing, with sliding trombones and a quick eight-beat rhythm.

Brandon is easygoing and affable. Very much a family man, his children—Star Lee, 8, and Terry, 5, often come into the Lounge and sit on their daddy's knee. Petite Mrs. Brandon follows and admonishes them, and the family goes out to spend intermission together.

Musically, Brandon started as a young kid to play one instrument and then another. He plays nearly all now, and says it's the best training there is for arranging. He now does many of the arrangements for NBC Symphony in Chicago, his headquarters. Most of the band's time is spent in Chicago, where it plays regularly at the Edgewater Beach and Stevens Hotels.

Artini and Consuelo are back in the Lounge, doing their polished dance routines. They and Brandon's orchestra will remain in the Lounge for some time.

A FAVORITE meeting place for downtown businessmen Olmsted's, convenient to nearly all offices, at 1337 G st., and scrupulously quick with mid-day meal service.

A usual lunch there might be New York clam chowder, baked oysters, Olmsted's original and widely copied rum buns, and perhaps a French cherry tart. The coffee, a brand from Java not obtainable in Washington, is especially good.

Incidentally, Olmsted's will be representing Washington restaurants in a display of china at Kalamazoo, Mich. The Schensul Restaurant there has collected inscribed china from all over the country. Such places as Antoine's of New Orleans, the House of Murphy in Los Angeles and the Homestead of Hot Springs, Va., have sent them their china.

Owners James Brahms and Leonard Mitchell recently received a letter from the Schensul. Many visitors there had mentioned meals at Olmsted's when in Washington, and the restaurant wanted Olmsted's represented on its walls. Soon it will receive the Olmsted pattern of a blue, delicately traced border on white background, "Olmsted's, Washington, D. C." prominently inscribed in the middle.

Warrant Lack Frees Man on Gun Charge

Even though a man may have committed a felony at one address, police may not search and arrest him at another address with a warrant unless they have seen him enter the second place, Municipal Judge Armond Scott ruled yesterday.

Scott's ruling resulted in suppression as evidence of a revolver in the case of Earl Leroy Euell, 40, of 1111 4th st. se., charged with threats in a menacing manner and possession of a revolver after a conviction for a crime of violence.

Another charge—larceny of a revolver from the District Guard Armory—is pending before the grand jury.

Euell was arrested Christmas Day at his home after police received a radio call that the man had tried to kill a girl friend with a gun in a lunchroom at 607 4th st. sw., had threatened the proprietor, Sam Moy, and had then gone to 1111 4th st. se. The girl later declined to prosecute.

Law School Segregation End Sought

A group of 188 law professors today will file a Supreme Court brief on behalf of a Negro law student challenging "separate but equal" University of Texas law school facilities.

The professors, calling themselves the Committee of Law Teachers Against Segregation in Legal Education, argue that Texas is depriving Negroes of "equal opportunity for education" by maintaining separate schools. The group calls this a violation of the Constitution's fourteenth amendment.

The brief declares separate law schools are "a mockery of legal education and of equal protection of the laws" and argues that the intent of the amendment was "thoroughly understood to mean identical, and not separate rights."

The case revolves around efforts of Heman M. Sweatt to enter the University of Texas despite establishment of a separate law school for Negroes following a Texas court order in the case.

Office Union Loses Plea Against CIO

Federal Judge Burnita Matthews yesterday denied a plea from the United Office and Professional Workers for a temporary restraining order to keep the CIO from moving against the union on charges of Communist domination.

Judge Matthews said she would decide other issues—including a plea for a permanent injunction to keep the CIO from booting the union out—"within a few days."

The UOPWA is one of the 10 unions now under CIO investigation, accused of following the Communist Party program rather than CIO policies.

The union sought the temporary order to block the CIO's investigation and action by the CIO executive board, meeting here February 14.

Hearings on the charges against UOPWA were held December 19. A committee headed by Emil Rieve of the textile workers will report to the executive board with recommendations for action.

Arthur J. Goldberg, general counsel of the CIO, said that the UOPWA had not used up all the remedies available within the CIO, and therefore was not entitled to court relief.

Leonard B. Boudin of New York City, UOPWA lawyer, told the court:

"There are no remedies to exhaust inside the CIO, regardless of what the general counsel says."

Boudin said Rieve and his committee are biased against the UOPWA and that Rieve has made speeches about throwing the union out of the CIO.

Gen. Vaughan Gets Legion 'Distinguished Service' Medal

Maj. Gen. Harry H. Vaughan, military aide to President Truman, last night received the American Legion Guard of Honor's "distinguished service medal" at the Legion group's annual ball at the Shoreham Hotel.

The award was presented General Vaughan, the citation said, for his assistance to the American Legion in the rehabilitation of World War II veterans. The citation mentioned Vaughan's position as coordinator of veteran affairs.

The presentation itself was made by Guy C. Nadeau, past commander of the District Department of the Legion and a past captain of the Guard of Honor.

Among the guests present were Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson, Capt. Don Gentile, World War II Air Force ace; Municipal Court Judge Milton S. Kronheim, jr.; J. Monroe Johnson, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission; Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director of Selective Service; Col Waldron Leonard, director of the D. C. Veterans Service Center; Col. Paul H. Griffith, Assistant Secretary of Defense and Brig. Gen. Louis H. Renfrow, assistant to Secretary Johnson.

The award to General Vaughan marked the sixth time the medal has been presented to others than the retiring captain of the Guard of Honor, the Legion's crack ceremonial company.

The immediate past captain of the guard, James Clark, already has received the award. Warren A. Hilleary, present captain, commanded the organization during the ceremonies.

In accepting the medal, Vaughan declared, "I have had the privilege and honor to be a member of the Legion for about 31 years. It is an organization I have always been proud to serve and be identified with.

"There are many things the Legion does that would be a credit to any organization."

Nadeau hailed the general for his World War I service and said, "I do not believe there is a man in the United States who is more worthy of this medal."

Griffith, past national Legion commander, praised Vaughan "as a great servant of the veteran in his capacity at the White House."

MEN READ CAREFULLY

Saturday morning at 9 sharp, I want to talk to 20 men who are really ambitious in securing a position that will give them steady employment the year 'round. In other words, there are no laying-off periods, and consistent income is the income that really counts. It doesn't matter what your past employment has been, all we ask is that you be willing to study and learn as we teach you our work. It will also be necessary that you be willing to get along on $75 to $85 per week for the first 4 or 6 weeks while learning our work. A car is essential. You must also be able to give the names of 3 people who will vouch for your honesty and integrity. We prefer men who are married or men who have some measure of responsibility. I would also like to talk to a few men who are mechanically inclined and who know a good thing when they see it. Therefore, if you are honest and of good character, willing worker, neat in appearance, come and talk with me.

Hayes Tells How He Got Security Job

By the United Press

Theodore T. (Teddy) Hayes, former trainer of Jack Dempsey and publicity man for a Mexican lottery whose backers welshed, explained yesterday how he was named assistant to Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing.

Hayes, who joined the agency last July but was named assistant in November, said he had "heard about the position over here" and put in a bid for it.

"I told Ewing I thought I could do a job for him," he said. "I'd been around, and I thought I had the necessary qualifications.

"He gave me the job. I told him I thought he had a good cause."

[Ewing's November news announcement identified Hayes as director and executive vice president of the Auto-Ordnance Corp., the Thomas Machinegun Corp., and Maguire Industries, Inc., manufacturers of arms and electronics. It made no mention of Hayes' Dempsey or Mexico City associations.—Editor's Note.]

Hayes, who trained Dempsey from 1919 to 1925, acts as the FSA's liaison man with Congress. He is supposed to answer congressional questions on Social Security, Federal Aid to Education, and the proposed national health insurance plan which Ewins is pushing.

He said he knows Edward J. Flynn, Democratic boss in New York's Bronx, "very well," but denied Flynn had "a darn thing to do" with his being appointed.

He said his qualifications included work he did as executive assistant to Flynn when Flynn was in charge of Federal participation in the New York World's Fair.

He denied he ever promoted Mexican Sweepstakes, Inc., the lottery which was under postoffice investigation and neglected to pay off most of its winners.

"I was engaged in the advertising business in Mexico City," he said. "I got their account. I never had anything to do with promoting it."

'This I Remember'

Supreme Court Decision Trouble . . . British Royalty Visits White House .

This is another installment of the serialization of "This I Remember," the nonfiction best seller in which Eleanor Roosevelt tells the story of Franklin D. Roosevelt's career, from 1924 to his death in 1945. Succeeding installments will be printed in The Washington Post through February 4.

By Eleanor Roosevelt

INSTALLMENT XIV

IN 1937 FRANKLIN became troubled over the decisions the Supreme Court was rendering. His advisers were divided, some of them feeling that it was very unwise to have any change made in the Court. He felt, however, that if it was going to be possible to pass progressive legislation only to have it declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court no progress could be made. He also felt that often older people became too conservative and should not be allowed to continue indefinitely to wield great power.

The defeat of the Supreme Court bill seemed to me to be a real blow to Franklin, but this feeling lasted only a short time, and later he was able little by little to change the complexion of the Court. He remarked one day he thought the fight had been worthwhile in spite of the defeat, for it had at least focused the attention of the public on the Supreme Court and its decisions, and he felt that aroused public interest was helpful. He had a firm belief in the collective wisdom of the people when their interest was aroused and they really understood the issues at stake.

I used to think he might have saved himself a good deal of trouble by just waiting a while, since it was death and resignations that really gave him the opportunity to appoint new people to the Supreme Court. However, if he had not made the fight perhaps fewer people would have resigned.

As we neared the congressional elections of 1938 I could see that Franklin was troubled. The way he felt about the Supreme Court was in line with the way he felt about reactionary legislators. He felt it was essential to have liberal Congressmen if his liberal program was to continue. The fact that the Democratic Party had a large majority had not unified it as a fighting group; instead it had divided it into factions. At times one felt that within the Democratic Party one had, to all intents and purposes, a group of people who would work better with the more conservative Republican Party. This led to a division among the Presidential advisers and within the Cabinet and resulted finally in what was known as The Purge.

Best Political Adviser

IF THERE were political mistakes in this campaign some of them, I think, might have been avoided had Louis Howe been alive. After Louis Howe's death, Franklin never had a political adviser who argued with him when he really disagreed and yet still gave him unquestioned loyalty.

In Harry Hopkins, years later, my husband found the same type of companionship and loyalty Louis had given him but not the political wisdom and careful analysis of each situation. Jim Farley argued with Franklin, but never very effectively, because his reasons were based on political practicality. Therefore in this period Franklin frequently made decisions without canvassing all sides of the question.

In the main I think that in the 1938 congressional election campaign Franklin would have followed much the course that he did follow no matter what might have been said. His basic reason was a feeling that he must have people in Congress who understood and would work for his objectives.

I can remember several occasions when people told me that this or that person was hurt because the President had not been able to see him and therefore Franklin could not count on their vote. When I told my husband, as I always did, he would wearily say: "I wish there were more hours in the day and that I had the strength to work longer hours at night." As he grew busier and busier this complaint was made more often, and Franklin's answer was increasingly truthful and sad.

Franklin's activities in the campaign of 1938 were thought by many people to have been a political mistake. I am not a good enough politician to know, but I have tried here to set forth the reasons that I think actuated him. I know that when people told him he had made a mistake he would say: "Well, that is water over the dam now. If I made a mistake, I thought I had good reasons for what I did. Now we will try to have my past actions do as little harm as possible to the programs which we must consider for the next two years."

The arrival of the Swedish crown prince and princess in the United States in the summer of 1938 marked the beginning of a series of visits from members of Europe's royal families. It was evident that the people of Europe were deeply troubled by the general feeling of unrest and uncertainty on the Continent and were looking for friends in other parts of the world. Hence their sudden and unprecedented interest in the United States.

Welcomed Visits

MY HUSBAND welcomed these visits, and I think probably encouraged them. Convinced that dire things were going to befall Europe, he wanted to make contacts with those he hoped would preserve and adhere to democracy and prove to be allies against fascism when the conflict came.

That same spring the King and Queen of England decided to visit the Dominion of Canada. It was quite evident that they were making ready for the blow that might fall and knew well that they would need the devotion of every citizen in their dominions throughout the world. My husband invited them to come to Washington largely because, believing that we all might soon be engaged in a life-and-death struggle, he hoped that their visit would create a bond of friendship between the people of the two countries.

Although their visit was prepared for very carefully, Franklin behaved throughout as though we were simply going to have two very nice young people to stay with us. As a result I think he gave some of the protocol people, both in the State Department and in the entourage of the King and Queen, some difficult moments.

There was one person, however, who looked upon the visit as a very serious affair—Mr. William Bullitt, at that time our Ambassador to France. He sent me a secret memorandum, based on experience gained from the King and Queen's visit to Paris the year before, in which all the smallest details had been noted and put down. I have that memorandum today as one of our most amusing documents. Among other things, he listed the furniture which should be in the rooms used by the King and Queen, told me what I should have in the bathrooms and even the way the comforter on the bed should be folded! He admonished me to have a hotwater bottle in every bed, which I did, though the heat of Washington must have made this courtesy unbearable. One thing which was listed and which I was never able to find was a linen blanket for the Queen's couch. Nobody I asked on this side of the ocean knew what that might be.

Problem of Chairs

I ALWAYS wanted to ask Mr. Bullitt if when he himself had stayed in the White House he had found lacking some of the things he listed as essential, such as soap, a water glass, towels and so on.

For these very formal occasions we were always given in advance a complete layout by the chief of protocol of the State Department.

In the White House there are in the dining room two special, high-backed armchairs—one for the President and one for his wife. No one else ever occupies them at meals! They presented a great problem for the household on this occasion. Should only the King and the President have the armchairs? That did not seem respectful to the Queen. But we could not take the President's chair away from him. Finally Franklin solved the difficulty by inquiring quietly: "Why don't we buy two more armchairs identical with those we now have? The chairs were copied, and all was well.

I told Franklin that British protocol required the head butler, Fields, to stand with a stopwatch in his hand and, 30 seconds after he and the King had been served, dispatch a butler to serve the Queen and myself. I also inquired whether or not we should break the rule about the President being always served first. He looked at me with firmness. "We will not require Fields to have a stopwatch," he said. "The King and I shall be served simultaneously, and you and the Queen will be served next."

The Secretary of State and Mrs. Hull, with their party, had met the members of the royal party at Niagara Falls and accompanied them on the train to Washington. There was much pageantry about their arrival and the procession to the White House. That was something my husband always enjoyed, for he liked to put on a show. I dreaded it, but we went down to the station and, with the Government officials who were members of the reception committee, stood waiting in the President's reception room for the train's arrival. Franklin had arranged for some of the members of our immediate staff at the White House to stand in inconspicuous places where they could watch this reception and be a part of the procession back to the White House.

After the presentations my husband and I escorted the King and Queen through the guard of honor, which was drawn up in front of the station. The British National Anthem and "The Star-Spangled Banner" were played, and there was a 21-gun salute.

Queen Was Fascinating

THEN THE inevitable photographs were taken, and finally my husband, the King and the Queen and I got into our respective cars and started with military escort on the drive to the White House. There were crowds all along the way, and I was fascinated watching the Queen. She had the most gracious manner and bowed right and left with interest, actually looking at people in the crowd, so that I am sure many of them felt that her bow was really for them personally.

We drove into the White House grounds by the southeast gate in through the south entrance. Immediately on our arrival what is known as a Diplomatic Circle was held in the East Room for the heads of all the diplomatic missions and their wives. At that time the British Ambassador, Sir Ronald Lindsay, was dean of the Diplomatic Corps. He presented the chiefs of missions and their wives to the King while Lady Lindsay, his wife, presented them to the Queen. My husband and I were not presented at the Diplomatic Circle. When it was over the King and Queen went to their rooms for a few minutes of quiet before we assembled for an informal luncheon.

After lunch the King and my husband in one car and the Queen and I in another drove around Washington. Our route was given out beforehand so that people could have an opportunity to see the King and Queen. It meant, of course, that we had very little chance to talk except when we were driving where people could not line up on the sidewalks. At one point the Queen endeared herself to me by saying suddenly: "I saw in the paper that you were being attacked for having gone to a meeting of the WPA workers. It surprises me that there should be any criticism, for it is so much better to allow people with grievances to air them. And it is particularly valuable if they can do so to someone in whom they feel a sense of sympathy and who may be able to reach the head of the government with their grievances."

While we were out some amusing things had happened at home. The housekeeper, Mrs. Nesbitt, was harassed, and when she was harassed she usually went to Miss Thompson. The fact that the many English servants quartered in our servants' rooms were requiring as much attention as she had expected to give to everyone combined was in itself a burden she found difficult to handle. As always, Miss Thompson was her refuge. Even in this country, where people have shed their blood to be independent of a king, there is still an awe of and an interest in royalty and the panoply which surrounds it.

Servant Trouble

THE first intimation of any difficulty between our staff and the royal servants came when the housekeeper reported to Miss Thompson that the King's valet was making unreasonable demands from her point of view, and did not like our food and drink. Miss Thompson has a certain decisiveness, besides a sense of humor, so when Mrs. Nesbitt said, "What shall I do?" Miss Thompson answered, "If you think you have done all you should do, just say so."

The dinner and the party afterward went very well, though there were a few harrowing moments. First of all, Marian Anderson was loath to sing Negro spirituals, but we discovered it in time to persuade her that people coming from England would want to hear the music that above all else we could call our own. Once we had to slow up the receiving line because the heat made the Queen feel faint. Then Kate Smith thought she was going to be late for her broadcast, so we had to rearrange the program and let her sing first!

One of the young men who had been asked to sing some folk songs had been reported to the FBI as a Communist or Bolshevik and likely to do something dangerous. The charge was completely untrue and was made by someone who wanted to be disagreeable, but when the FBI reported it to the Secret Service they had to be true to their traditions and follow through such a tip. When the young man came in after dinner he was frisked by our Secret Service and then by Scotland Yard, and apparently was so frightened he could hardly sing.

When everyone finally got to bed that night they must all, including the King and Queen, have breathed sighs of relief.

To be continued tomorrow.

Bullitt's Memo When King and Queen Visited

The following is the secret memorandum sent by William Bullitt, at that time Ambassador to France, to Mrs. Roosevelt on the occasion of the visit of the King and Queen of Great Britain to the White House:

GENERAL REMARKS CONCERNING THE SOVEREIGNS AND THEIR SUITE

In all the rooms: No bolsters—two pillows. Notepaper—penholders, inkstands, writing pads, etc.

Ladies-in-waiting: Hot water bottle (belonging to them) in each bed. Two or three glasses and spoons.

In all bathrooms: Glasses, soap.

Numerous vases to be prepared for flowers offered to the Queen at the receptions.

Special linen room for the Queen, enabling her second maid to press gowns and linen without the attendance of any outsider.

In that room there should be a large supply of white tissue paper and string of various sizes, to be used when repacking.

In the Queen's wardrobes, hangers should not be placed too high, since Her Majesty seldom wears dresses with trains, and her dresses should be easily reached.

Light muslin cloths should be provided with which hanging clothes would be covered.

A second linen room for the King's valet and the suite.

There should be in the room of the King's valet a large, solid table for cleaning shoes.

Newspapers for Their Majesties: The Times, Daily Telegraph, Le Figaro, Daily Sketch.

Should never be produced: Daily Mirror, Sunday Pictorial, News of the World, Daily Express, Daily Mail (read, however, by part of the suite and the servants).

BREAKFAST AND REFRESHMENTS

His Majesty: 8 a. m., plain tea; 9:15 a. m., complete breakfast with tea, toast, fruit, bacon and eggs.

Her Majesty: 8 a. m., plain tea.; 9:15 a. m., complete breakfast with tea, toast and fruit.

Service is always made separately, on trays, the latter prepared by the private servants of Their Majesties.

Whenever Their Majesties come home, tea should always be kept ready for them. Moreover, when they come back about midnight, ham sandwiches should be prepared.

The King generally brings his own liquor and spirits. His footman will need a tray with sets of glasses, lump and crushed ice, decanters of lemon and orange juice and everything necessary for the preparation of cocktails and various drinks.

In all the rooms a tray with mineral water in ice and glasses should be constantly renewed.

SUGGESTIONS FOR HIS MAJESTY'S ROOM

Large bed, de Milieu (in center of panel) with the head against the wall. (Never with the side along the wall.)

No bolster—two pillows. Special bolster supplied by His Majesty's valet.

Warm but light blankets with a silk cover.

Very soft eiderdown quilt, which can be accordion-pleated at the foot of the bed.

On each side of the bed a bedside table with a lamp.

In the bathroom or bedroom (according to possibility) and preferably in a window recess on account of light, a dressing table with a triple mirror, high enough to enable contemplating oneself when standing.

Ashtrays, matches, cigars and cigarettes for the guests, His Majesty having his own cigarettes.

Great number of hangers, some of them very wide with the back slightly curved, others with a double bar for trousers; no special clip hangers for trousers.

On the desk an inkstand with two inkwells; one full of blue-black, the other red ink.

No toweled bathrobe. His Majesty prefers large bath towels.

SUGGESTIONS FOR HER MAJESTY'S ROOM

Large bed. No bolster—two pillows.

Bed cushion supplied by Her Majesty's maid.

Light but warm blankets with a silk cover. No eiderdown coverlet—a soft silk cover folded in four on the foot of the bed, with one corner turned up.

Bedside table with lamp.

BATHROOM

A large dressing table or a table for the bottles.

Basket for putting linen after use.

Bath thermometer.

DRESSING ROOM OR BOUDOIR

Dressing table perfectly lighted day and night, with armchair of corresponding height.

Near the dressing table a small table with drawers for hair dressing and toilet articles. This table should be easily removable.

Very comfortable settee with soft linen blanket.

One or two ashtrays and matches for the King. The Queen does not smoke.

Miami Seeks Member of Purple Gang

Miami, Fla., Jan. 19 (AP).—A manhunt was under way today for Detroit Purple Gang member Myron (Mike) Selik following the capture of gang leader Harry Fleischer.

Crawford H. Carson, in charge of the Miami FBI office, described Salik as "a very much-wanted fugitive." The spotlight swung to Selik as Fleischer, 46, was held in $100,000 bond for return to Michigan to serve a term on a robbery conviction. Fleischer waived extradition and said, "I want to go back."

Fleischer will appear before Federal Judge John W. Holland Friday for the order of removal. Asked about his sentence to four and a half to five years for conspiracy in connection with the slaying of Michigan State Senator Warren Hooper in 1945, he snapped:

"You know darned well we were framed by those two rats." He didn't name the "rats."

Catalogue of Dreams

I keep a catalogue of dreams . . . To which I always turn . . . When I have time to think about . . . The things for which I yearn . . . The hopes that fill the days to come . . . With brighter atmospheres . . . And all the songs that seem to stir . . . The ghosts of yesteryears . . . I thumb the pages and I see . . . The sundry pictures there . . . Of every disappointment and . . . Each answer to a prayer . . . Of every longing and regret . . . And every tear and smile . . . The promise of tomorrow and . . . The memory worth while . . . My catalogue can never fade . . . Or ever fall apart . . . Because its pages hold the dreams . . . That linger in my heart.

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON: FRIDAY, JANUARY 20, 1950

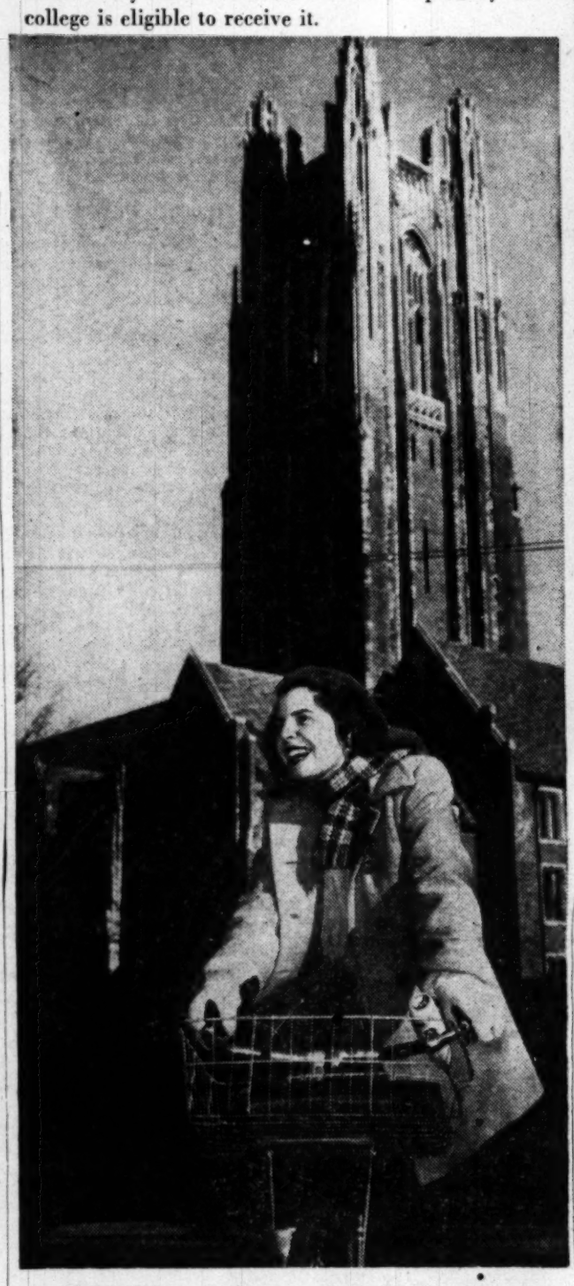
THE WELL, favorite snack bar on the Wellesley College campus, is rendezvous for a group of students from Washington. There they gather daily to sip coffee and swap hometown gossip. From left, Miss Kay Kerr, daughter of Senator and Mrs. Robert S. Kerr; Miss Elaine Hanson, daughter of Mrs. Rebecca E. Hanson, and Miss Barbara Davis, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Clifford Davis

After the Bell—D. C. Wellesley Girls Relax

WHEN the last class bell rings for the day on the Wellesley College campus, Washington students rush off to take part in their favorite extracurricular activity. It may be skating or skiing, bicycling or indoor tennis, a practice hour with the drama society—or merely a chat session, over coffee cups, at The Well.

Back in the Capital, former Wellesley students are deep in plans for a special project of their own. Members of the local alumnae club are sponsoring the benefit performance of the Ice Capades of 1950 Monday night at Uline Arena. Proceeds will go into the club's scholarship and seventy-fifth anniversary funds.

First Washington Wellesley Club scholarship was awarded in 1910, and has been presented each year since. Any local candidate who is accepted by the college is eligible to receive it.



BICYCLING and dramatics are the favorite extracurricular activities of Miss Lily Lodge, daughter of Representative and Mrs. John Davis Lodge. Here she rides her trusty bike to a rehearsal of "Eastward in Eden," which will be produced by the college drama society, the Barnswallows. Lily is a member of the junior class

A Time to Mourn

Diplomatic Set Won't Be Same Without Handsome Ambassador From Portugal

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

A GREAT LOSS to Washington's diplomatic gallery is the approaching departure of Portugal's handsome Ambassador, Senhor Pedro Theotonio Pereira. The Ambassador has many family obligations, and though he adores this country, has to go home and tend to his personal chores.

During his comparatively brief tenure as Ambassador Senhor Pereira has put Portugal on the Washington social map. He is responsible for every inch of the charming new embassy on Kalorama rd.

Senhor Pereira imported four tons of pink marble, carved doors and tiles. He himself picked out the embassy's furnishings down to the smallest detail. He personally selected lamp shades in Paris; created designs for both glassware and china (which, by the way, are being used in Portuguese embassies all over the globe), and selected the embassy's handsome, baroque silver. The Ambassador, who ruled in solitary splendor because his wife stayed in Portugal with his children, entertained beautifully and gave everyone of his guests a delightful time. Mr. Pereira will be very difficult to replace—and Washington's widows are exceedingly disconsolate!

Marseillaise, Modern Version

THIS afternoon Les Compagnons de la Chanson are to sing at the French Embassy. These nine young men, who have made such a hit in Europe, Hollywood and the Shoreham's Blue Room, will sing not only their most popular numbers, such as "The Bells," but also a group of songs deemed too special for night club and restaurant taste.

This band of pals who sing either without musical accompaniment or with the sole support of a guitar discovered each other back in 1941 in France's unoccupied zone, near Lyon.

For three years they troubadoured about, changing identities constantly when the authorities became suspicious of their activities, singing to young refugees who needed cheering throughout troubled France.

In 1944 they were invited to Paris to participate in a gala at the Comedie Francaise—this was their first big-time. After the Liberation, Edith Piaf became interested in their work and took them on a tour through Germany where they sang for French troops. One engagement led to another; they learned a bit of English, and now sing some of their songs, wonderfully accented, in this tongue.

The original group has been kept intact—the sole change being romantic addition. Two of the Compagnons recently took unto themselves brides in Canada.

What! No Room for Ingrid?

A FEW days ago a friend of Brig. Gen. Harry Vaughan residing in the deep hinterland sent him a clipping from a local gazette. The scrap of paper was an astrological roundup of what the stars had in store for a bunch of prominent people in 1950.

After listing a series of personalities definitely under kindly astral juxtaposition—President Truman, Secretary of State Acheson, Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr.—the lady astrologer continued on a less optimistic note.

"I can't say as much for the prospects of Harry Vaughan," she wrote sadly. "He is under heavy Saturnine vibrations, the same ones that hit Ingrid Bergman—and during April and May should lie low."

The sendee who forwarded this small crack of doom personally added a paragraph.

"Dear Harry: I understand you're being subjected to heavy Saturnine vibrations, especially in April and May. As you know we've built a new house, there's plenty of room, and we'd love to have you lie low with us—but please don't bring Ingrid along!"

College Sophomore, 20, Defies His Parents To Keep Consistently Late Hours With Girl He's Known Since Last Summer; Dad Worries

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Our son Paul is 20 years old and a sophomore in college. While home on vacation last summer he met June, 17 years old, a high school girl who lives a considerable distance from us, although in the same city.

Thereafter he was in June's company five or six evenings a week, and many nights he did not return home until 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning. Although I discussed this with him a number of times, the late hours continued until I threatened to take him out of college unless he came home at a reasonable hour.

He told us then that June's parents did not object to her hours and that all the boys and girls in the group could stay out as late as she could. I made it plain that if something special were planned for an evening, his mother and I would understand if he came in later. We allow him the use of the family car when possible.

Although he was more cooperative for the balance of the summer, the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays brought up the problem again, and on New Year's Day it was 5:40 a. m. when he came in. Do you think that his mother and I are being unreasonable and old fashioned in asking him to keep conservative hours? May we have your opinion as to the proper time a boy and girl their ages should be in? And what do you suggest, if they refuse to cooperate? J. J.

Is Boy Straining Against Dictation?

DEAR J. J.: Suppose I should say arbitrarily that a boy of 20 and a girl of 17 should be home by 12 midnight at the latest, on the average, after movie-and-hamburger dates—with curfew extended until, say, 3 a. m., on the occasion of formally chaperoned holiday parties. Also that sweethearts their age, who spend most evenings together in summer, should "break it up" and get home to their respective families, for various benefits, by 9 or 10 o'clock about three nights a week.

That "reasonable" attempt at dogmatic scheduling of the younger generation's expenditure of time, even supposing it might be a beneficial framework if they would accept it, still wouldn't help you achieve a basic constructive solution of your dispute with Paul's late hours—and I'll tell you why: His arguments against, and his resistance to, your "conservative" views really constitute a gloved repudiation, on his part, of your assertive tendency to run all departments of his life for him.

Your quiet spoken, noncommittal letter leads me to think you would go about supervising him in an indirect way, using "cooperative" tones to acquaint him with your desires, and waiting patiently to crack the whip with threats to expose him to himself as a helpless, dependent stripling, only if he doesn't subscribe to your recommendations.

Get Heads Together With Other Parents

A GOOD MANY fathers take that tack some anxiously with the best of intentions, others meanly for more despotic motives, and in any case it signifies that the overly-protective father has lost sight of his true moral obligation as a parent, namely (1) not to possess the child's life and soul, which in essence belong to the individual self and to God, but (2) to help the child achieve in gradually maturing measure, in every phase of pre-adult growth, reliable, independent competence in coping with experience outside the family.

When parents are liberal in that sense, and manifest in their family life profound respect for human rights, and when they increase their children's acceptance of personal responsibility step by step, and keep their attention attuned to moral essentials—then, it seems to me, their youngsters growing up have no "ambition" to keep late hours as such. On the other hand, they have no finicky fear of late-hour conviviality either; they don't regard it as the devil's climate especially, any more than noonday is; and it is this true sight on life that keeps their conduct wholesome by choice.

However, about your son—since his yen for late hours is linked to rebellion against restraint, and since the girl has no better sense than to keep his pace, there is danger in the practice, especially for her, I think. Thus I believe you'd be justified in courteously courting a confidential talk with her parents, to compare states of mind about the youngsters' routine, and see if you can work in cahoots to rein them in judiciously. Beyond that, I advise you to get a bit of psychiatric insight into the larger meaning of your quarrel with Paul, because there's a chance it might help you strike a successful new deal in relation to him. M. H.

Mrs. Imbrie Holds Annual Near East Fete

Mrs. Robert Whitney Imbrie yesterday gave her annual party for Near East friends at her home on 16th st. The Turkish Ambassador and Mme. Erkin were among the guests. Assistants of the hostess were Mrs. Thomas G. W. Settle, Mrs. Richard Glass, Mrs. Lucius Dunn, Mrs. Arthur David Condon and Mrs. James W. Boyer, jr.

At intervals for the past two decades there have been reunions of persons who served with Mrs. Imbrie and the late Major Imbrie in Turkey and the Near East. Major Imbrie was the first representative of the Department of State to the Nationalists in Ankara. At that time the first chancery was a railroad car on a siding in the depot. It was to this car that Major Imbrie took his bride.

Mrs. Imbrie, who was Katherine Gillespie, was at Ankara sometime before Major Imbrie's arrival. Because of her pioneer efforts in fostering the fight for freedom, the Turks call her "the first American Ambassador."

Accent on Eyes In 1950 Beauty

I wonder how many women realize that there are definite fashion changes in make-up as well as in clothes? You younger girls may be surprised to learn that not until the '20s was lipstick universally used.

The same period brought in vivid nail polish, but it took until the '30s for it to gain worldwide acceptance among all ages and all classes of women.

Now it looks as if 1950 would go down in history as the eye-make-up decade. Some women have always used mascara and eye shadow, but now everyone is doing it.

Shrimps, rice, and a Chinese recipe add up to a delectable dinner dish

Cookbooks in Review

China Opens Its Kitchen Door to U. S.

By Lucia Brown

CHINA'S kitchen door is flung wide open and all its mouth-watering treasures revealed in two recently issued cookbooks.

They're both revisions, published as a natural result of the popularity of earlier editions.

Fred Wing's "New Chinese Recipes," a 100-page volume published by Edelmuth, has an interesting history. It started with a New York housewife who wanted to learn to cook the Chinese way.

She visited a famous Chinese restaurant to watch the chefs at work but found none of their recipes were written down and furthermore that they moved so swiftly and deftly she was unable to take usable notes. She gave up the job in despair, but months later she and her husband met Fred Wing, young Chinese restaurateur, and Mabel Stegner, a home economics consultant.

They persuaded Mr. Wing to make Chinese dishes slowly so that Miss Stegner could translate his artistry into definite measurements.

THE RESULT is a book of Chinese recipes suited for use by the American housewife. Some are exotic, some as simple as the one given below. All can be made with everyday ingredients sold in American stores.

DOW-JAY-HAR
(Shrimps With String Beans)

1 pound string beans
4 tablespoons oil or fat
½ teaspoon salt
Dash pepper
1 pound raw shrimps
1 cup chicken bouillon
2 tablespoons cornstarch
¼ cup water
2 teaspoons soy sauce

Clean and dice beans and cook tender in enough boiling, salted water to cover. Place fat, salt and pepper in preheated, heavy 10-inch frying pan. Remove shells from shrimp, clean, dice and cook in fat, stirring occasionally, until lightly browned. Add bullion. Cover pan and cook over moderate flame about five minutes. Add cooked string beans.

Blend together cornstarch, water and soy sauce, and add to other mixture. Cook a few more minutes, stirring constantly, until juice thickens and whole mixture is very hot. Serve immediately with hot, boiled rice. This makes enough for four persons.

"HOW to Cook and Eat in Chinese" (John Day) is by Buwei Yang Chao, who describes herself as a doctor who "ought to be practicing instead of cooking." Her husband is Dr. Y. R. Chao, one of the world's greatest philologists. He and their four daughters have contributed to Mrs. Chao's cookbook. Her new edition includes many recipes not found in her original volume. Here is one, as given by Mrs. Chao:

Roast Chicken, Chinese Style

1 whole tender chicken (5 pounds.)
3 cups water
1 cup soy sauce
1 tablespoon sugar
½ cup sherry
3 or 4 slices fresh ginger
1 scallion
1 teaspoon salt

Boil water with seasonings. Then put chicken in. Continue brisk fire for 15 minutes. Turn off and let steep 20 minutes. Roast at 500 degrees Fahrenheit for 15 minutes until browned over. Cut chicken in kitchen with bones on, but if you prefer to carve and serve American way—well, do as you like. The juice may be used for gravy and left-over juice may be used in pot stewing.

Market Memo

Chicken and Egg Both Come First!

NO need to worry any more about which comes first, the chicken or the egg! They're both tops on the marketing list these days.

EGG AND CHICKEN prices are at their lowest in years. Broilers and fryers — cheaper than since prewar days — will be abundant up into March. Meanwhile, cacklers are laying at record pace and egg prices are back at OPA levels.

MOLASSES in January! Well, it's starred on the Department of Agriculture's plentiful food list, along with sugar cane syrup. How about having that mid-winter favorite, hot gingerbread? Incidentally, did you know that Birmingham, Ala., folks eat three times as much syrup as families in Northern cities? A recent survey proved it. Shows who's eating all the hot bread!

KALE is one of the most abundant and nourishing greens on the market now, but it's still something of a Cinderella vegetable. Good cooking can make it a queen of the dinner table, however.

DANISH KALE SOUP is a tasty dish. Use 4 cups milk, 2 tablespoons fat (bacon or table); 1 medium onion, finely cut; 3 medium potatoes, cooked and cubed; ½ to ¾ teaspoon salt; 1 cup raw kale, broken into ½-inch pieces. Scald milk in double boiler. Brown onion lightly in fat. Add with all other ingredients to milk and cook over boiling water 15 minutes.

"SACK O' SAUCE IN A CAN O' MEAT" is a new idea in tinned goods. Barbecue sauce in a little bag is tucked into a can of beef or pork or wieners. You mix meat and sauce after you open the can, so that neither loses its distinctive flavor by long mingling.

"BROWN 'N' SERVE ROLLS"—have you tried 'em? They're bakery rolls that are still white in color when you buy them packaged. You pop them in the oven 7 minutes to complete the cooking. They'll keep three weeks in the refrigerator before the final cooking, have a "just-baked" taste when you serve them.

Dr. Blain to Speak

Dr. Daniel Blain will be the honor guest and speaker at a luncheon of the Women's National Press Club today, 12:30 p. m., in the Chinese room of the Mayflower Hotel.

About Invitations, Service, Decorations at Baby Shower

I want to have a stork shower for my daughter-in-law, at my sister's house. I would like to know how to go about it; how to fix the house, whom to ask, what to serve, what games to play, what to do. I don't know one thing about it, so please help me. She is expecting the baby in April. R. L. B.

Here are plans for a baby shower which were given in Family Circle magazine. The luncheon shower was planned by Mrs. H. D. Perry, of Salt Lake City, Utah. Mrs. Perry starts out by saying that the invitations were made from scraps of white muslin, folded square and pinned at each upper corner with a tiny gilt safety pin. Inside Mrs. Perry tucked a piece of note paper which said "Let's get together for lunch at my house at 12 on Wednesday the 12th and give Marjorie Brown a baby shower. Bring something for the baby and, if possible, bring a photograph or snapshot of you and one of your husband, taken when you were babies. You can have them back when you leave!"

As the guests arrived they gave their pictures and gifts to the hostess who numbered each photograph on the back and put the same number on a slip of paper with the identifying name.

The guest of honor was invited to come after the other guests at 12:30 and lunch was served on her arrival.

The dining table was covered with a white paper cloth which had pink roses on it. Tiny roses and baby breath formed the centerpiece.

A pink rose was at each place and at the guest of honor's was placed a tiny plastic doll with an attached card on which was written "Mighty lak' a rose . . . Make you think that heav'n is comin' clost ter you." Also, at each place were candy baskets in shape of bassinets, draped with pink or blue crepe paper and filled with spice drops. Each basket bore the legend: "Sugar and Spice—all babies are nice!"

After lunch the baby pictures were spread on a living room table for a guessing game. It adds to the fun if you slip the guest of honor's husband's baby picture among the others. Scorecards for the picture identification can be in the shape of baby's bonnets with a small pencil attached. The person who is able to identify the largest number of pictures received a picture frame.

Another game is to arrange the guests on chairs in a circle. Around the circle, one after another, is passed baby pictures from well known ads. After all pictures are passed around, each guest tries to write down the names of the products the babies advertise.

For presentation, the gifts can be placed in a buggy and wheeled before the honored guest, or they can be wrapped in a baby blanket and laid in her lap as you would a baby.

No special decorations in the house are necessary. Fresh flowers or potted plants about the rooms are always lovely.

Usually only the guest of honor's closest friends or relatives are invited to the shower.

If your party is a lucheon, you could serve one hot dish such as creamed chicken in patty shells and a molded fruit salad. With this for dessert, ice cream and cake with coffee would be lovely. If the party is an afternoon affair, reverse the procedure and serve the refreshments at the end. For this you could serve molded ice cream shapes, cookies, and coffee. Or, hot tea, tiny sandwiches, and cup cakes would be equally nice.

The white porcelain top of my stove has a number of black or rather dark spots on it, and in one place it appears that the porcelain has been "eaten." Do you know of anything that I can do to give it its beautiful white finish? R. D. S.

Sometimes burned on grease and similar deposits can be removed from enamel by wiping with baking powder on a damp cloth. If this doesn't completely remove them, use a razor blade to shave them off. Work slowly, holding the blade at such an angle that the enamel is not chipped. When the deposit has been completely removed, if the enamel is still disclored you may be able to whiten it somewhat by dampening a cloth in household bleach and laying it over the stain. Allow 30 minutes or so to act. Repeat if necessary.

I am planning a trip to Europe in the late summer. Could you tell me where I might purchase a hair bleach that comes in powder form? Also, a cleaning agent (for dry cleaning) that comes in powder form? It will be difficult to carry liquids and also it may be hard to purchase hydrogen peroxide. B. R. G.

I've called several beauty supply houses and find no one who sells or knows of a dry hair bleach. Would some of our readers who have had this problem tell us how you solved it?

As for a cleaning agent in dry form, it seems there is no effective product of this description on the market. Of course, for use such a product would probably have to be mixed with water and would no longer be a dry cleaner.

I have replaced my down sofa seat cushions and I wonder if you can tell me how to anchor the latex cushion. The fit is perfect, but still the upholstery material slides one way, the slip cover another, so they still look as bad as the down pillows did.

To anchor a latex cushion, open the upholstery at the back of the cushion and cement a piece of tape to the foam rubber. Then with a few inconspicuous stitches tack the upholstery fabric to the tape. Held tightly in one place, the upholstery will stay put. And with the upholstery immobilized, the slip cover will remain in place.

There is a firm on H Street which sells foam rubber products and supplies. They will be pleased to supply you with the tape and the special foam rubber cement for attaching it. You may contact them by calling Sterling 3855.

Will you please explain the difference between an "Open House" and a "Housewarming?" Are the refreshments the same for both, and is a gift mandatory at either, in the case of a new home? R. L.

A "house warming" is given only when the tests are entertaining for the first time in new quarters. An "open house" or "at home" may be given upon moving into a new home or whenever the hosts wish to entertain a large number of guests on a drop in basis. The same type of refreshments may be served at both, usually a punch and, or hot drink, sandwiches, cakes, and mints. Or, if the party is an evening one you may serve ice cream and cake with a hot drink.

A gift for the house may be taken to a housewarming but is never mandatory. A gift is not taken to an "open house" or "at home" unless you are very close friends to the hosts and know the occasion to be one celebrating settlement in a new home.

One on the Aisle—

Ice-Ca-Publicist Still Good Skate

By Richard L. Coe

PEOPLE ABOUT THE TOWN: Denise Benoit, that chic chick you used to see skating in the "Ice-Capades" with her sister, Francine, has a new title: "Ice-ca-publicist." . . . Denise keeps her skates in her trunk now, gets around town in shoes telling everyone about what a grand show this year's edition is and being happy that Mrs. Truman will attend the Wellesley College endowment fund benefit Monday night at Uline's . . . "I'm off my skates," Denise says, "because my third partner got married. Just can't take the uncertainty of finding a new partner, I guess. My first partner was my brother Pierre, who's now studying medicine . . . Then I linked up with Eldon Adair, who drifted away . . . Sister Francine stuck it out for six years, then got married last summer . . . I was getting up a new act when Ice-Ca-Publicist Mary Francis Ackerman got married, so John Harris put me in this job . . . And, would you believe it, I love it? . . . It's fun meeting new people all the time, and while I miss the kids in the show because I'm always ahead of them on our route, this is an adventure—plus, of course, lots of work." . . . One advantage Miss Benoit (a Canadian) has over other advance agents is that she can lend a hand at skating . . . For that Monday benefit she's been drilling Embassy youngsters for a special intermission entertainment and finds that being back on skates is fun . . . The "Capades" couldn't have a more fittin' advance "Capet."

HORTON FOOTE, the Institute of Contemporary Arts figure and a prime move in last summer's Meridian Hill Park venture, has sold his newest play, "The Chase," to Producer Herman Shumlin.

JIMMY WRIGHT, playing Dude Lester in the Howard's "Tobacco Road," has had the theatrical career especially reserved for Negro players . . . Roles for young Negroes are scarce on the professional stage, and between parts, Jimmy has worked as a Pullman porter, a restaurant dishwasher and a day laborer . . . When working, he goes into important roles in "Mamba's Daughters," Welles' "Macbeth," "A Long Way Home" or "Haiti." . . . Jimmy began as a Cotton Club hoofer, though his looks belie that age . . . It reminds you of the fact that Ethel Waters, scoring one of the great successes of a distinguished career at New York's Empire Theater in "The Member of the Wedding," was on a tour of the smaller night spots only two months ago . . . And Pearl Bailey, about to be the big hit of "Arms and the Girl," was also filling time in the lesser spots . . . So Jimmy Wright keeps at his chosen profession whenever it calls him from his wife and three youngsters.

MRS. STABLER'S Ticket Mart for out-of-town theater and concert tickets is now firmly established in Brentano's on F st. . . . Her Baltimore offer of limousine service for $2.50 round trip beats the rail fare, she's happy to say, and "A Streetcar Named Desire" is keeping her busy this week . . . . The Mart's phone number is still STerling 5088.

ROBERT FLAHERTY is presenting a unique film to guests of the National Gallery of Art Saturday afternoon the 28th . . . This is "The Titan: the Story of Michelangelo," an Italian-made film with narration by Fredric March . . . Guest of honor of the Gallery will be the Italian Ambassador.

DICK SHEA is a young playwright about to see something all young playwrights would like to see—his first play in action . . . The Catholic Social Club of Northern Virginia will present "The Pine Tree Limited" next Sunday night in the St. James School auditorium, Falls Church . . . The idea is that this one performance will give Shea audience reaction and clews as to what if any, rewriting must be done . . . If it goes over, the performance will be repeated for the general public . . . Aiding in this venture are Arlingtonites Corinne Campion, Teresa Johnston, Aloise Verhunce, Bill Murphy, James Rogers and Paul Charbonea. Shea once was on the staff of The Washington Post.

ANGELO EGAN is directing the Falls Church Community Theater in a production of "The Silver Cord," to be acted tonight and tomorrow night at 8:30 in the Madison School, Falls Church.

PHIL HAYDEN, that Connecticut ave. dance man, is back at his home studios from a trip to the West Coast, where he's opened a branch . . . Betty Bigelow, who took over for Hayden during his armed forces period, has been holding down the home fort, whose big event each year is its "Revue Intime," if you may call intime "big."

Let's Start With a Test For Our Puzzle Fans

WTOP's Claude "Once Over Lightly" Mahoney and "Write to Me" Vern Hansen teamed up to ruin a night's sleep for me recently, and I might as well do as much for you.

The boys stuck me with a particularly horrendous version of the familiar "How Old Is Ann?" puzzle. It went like this:

"The sum of Mary's and Ann's ages is 44. Mary is twice as old as Ann was when Mary was half as old as Ann will be when Ann is three times as old as Mary was when Mary was three times as old as Ann. How old is Ann?"

After working on the thing for two hours, I reached the point where I didn't really care how old Ann is. But eventually, with a little logic and curbstone algebra, I worked it out. The solution will appear tomorrow.

POOR GUY

A henpecked man dropped off to snooze;
Outside, two cats were snarling.
He shifted slightly in his chair
And murmured: "Coming, darling."

Mary Ellen.

THAT SYMPHONY DRIVE

"Why should I contribute to the National Symphony Orchestra's sustaining fund drive?" asks a reader. "Don't I do my share by buying tickets to concerts?"

Certainly the folks who buy tickets are helping the orchestra. It could not survive without them.

But the National Symphony needs additional help each year, and Conductor Howard Mitchell explains the situation like this:

"We estimate that we'll take in $241,740 at the box office this year. But we plan to spend $431,740 to give the people of Washington a fine orchestra composed of first-class musicians.

"To raise ticket prices would mean to deny good music to many people of modest income. So the anticipated deficit of $190,000 must be met by public subscription.

"And there is no reason why it shouldn't be. Fine music is not a business, or a profit-making enterprise. It is a community experience, to be shared by all, enjoyed by all, and supported by all.

"I know that this isn't practical, but I'd love to see that $190,000 raised by $1 contributions from 190,000 different people. That would give the orchestra the truly broad base that every civic project should have."

As far as I'm concerned, Mitch makes mighty good sense. But maybe we ought to be practical and add a bit to our dollars, to make up for those who may not give at all.

SUGGESTION BOX

This is the season of rain and slush and snow, and Marion Olds of the Applied Physics Lab at Johns Hopkins University has a plea for motorists:

We pedestrians know that you can't always avoid splashing us as you go by—but if you'd try to miss us as often as possible, we'd sure appreciate it.

RUMOR DEPT.

There's a tip out that the Federal Communications Commission may take a dim view of Transit Radio, not only in Washington but all over the country. Basis for the objection might be the charge that programs beamed to captive audiences are not "broadcasting" in the legal sense, therefore not entitled to broadcast frequencies.

If that is actually the FCC's position, it's a first cousin to the ban on direct person-to-person communication (except on the amateur bands).

Remember the fuss about the famous singer saying good night to his mother?

CRITERION

Maj. Charles S. Coulter, USA ret., of 4212 37th st. nw., writes:

"You do your friend Dennis an injustice when you interpret his interest in close-in parking space as due to age.

"If he had written you from Paris about Saint-Germain des Pres; of the organ recitals which are given daily in Sainte-Clothilde; of the magnificent view from the dome of Sacre-Coeur—then you'd know that he's as old as I am. But it's an odds-on bet he's more familiar with the Folies-Bergere."

Oh, I don't know about that, major. His wife went along.

REPUBLICAN JOKE

Joe Paull reports that the best wisecrack to hit Judiciary Square in a long time is the current:

"Faye Emerson went to Mexico to get the Fifth Freedom—Freedom from Roosevelt."

SUSIE Q.

"They call her 'Feet' because . . . er . . . ah . . . because she's such a good dancer!"

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Gaming Rackets Undermine Law

By Drew Pearson

Earlier in this series I expressed the opinion that President Truman knew nothing about the links that some of his henchmen have with Costelloism and the gambling racketeers.

Costello

I base this opinion on the fact that, at this moment, Federal grand juries are probing the racketeers in Los Angeles Miami and Kansas City.

This investigation includes the new Democratic boss of Kansas City, Charles Binaggio, who has carried the town for Truman by resounding majorities, but who, nevertheless, was hauled before a grand jury by the Justice Department at the very same time Truman was in Kansas City for the Bill Boyle testimonial dinner.

Actually, these grand juries cannot clean up gambling, which comes under local law-enforcement agencies, but they can crack down on narcotics, income-tax evasions and illegal immigration, which go hand in hand with gambling. In fact, Frankie Costello, an Italian immigrant, could be deported to Italy tomorrow if the Justice Department wanted to act.

Undermining Enforcement

The important thing about the gambling rackets, whether they be in Miami, Kansas City, or Fresno, Calif., is the manner in which they undermine law enforcement.

Most people probably see nothing wrong with a $2 bet or with slot machines in a beer tavern. But along with the $2 bet and the slot machines go payoffs to the police. These payoffs may be only $30 a week. But when a cop will take $30 a week to protect a gambling joint, he will also take $1000 to fix a murder case. Once the pattern of a dishonest police force is fixed, there is no boundary line where it can be stopped.

In Kansas City only 2 out of 13 gangland murders have been solved by the police in the last two years. And as a result of the current Justice Department probe in Kansas City, one witness before the grand jury, Daniel W. Robinson, was murdered recently. Another witness, Sam Butler, after being badgered by the gang, committed suicide.

The invasion of Costelloism is always slow, almost imperceptible. At first it can scarcely be detected.

Nearly always it gets a foot in the door through heavy political contributions to a candidate for public office. He may be completely honest, but he needs the money and doesn't think twice about the obligations he must fufill after he takes office.

In Kansas City, for instance, it was Democrat Forrest Smith, running for Governor of Missiouri in 1948, who accepted the backing of the Binaggio gang. Now that he's in the Governor's chair, Smith, has no love for the gamblers or what they stand for. Nevertheless, Binaggio's political power is an inescapable fact. Binaggio has even been admitted, after Smith's election, to the secret Democratic caucus of the Missouri Legislature, while two Binaggio friends have been named by Governor Smith to the Kansas City Police Board.

Gamblers Guessed Wrong

In Louisiana, Huey Long got started through exactly the same process. Frankie Costello arrived with a $100,000 cash contribution to Huey's campaign, in return for which Huey opened up the State to slot machines.

This looked harmless at the time, and was the most painless way for Huey to raise money to fight the big oil companies and utilities then bent on defeating him. But it paved the way for the most ruthless State dictatorship this country has ever seen.
